Catherine doted on Princess Charlotte and Prince George.

ROYALS UNEDITED

The shots of the Duchess of Cambridge and her kids watching Prince William at the Maserati Royal Charity Polo (p. 6) were so refreshing. When I saw them I immediately thought of similar images of Princess Diana in the 1980s dancing and playing shoeless and uninhibited on the grass. The less polished, less-than-perfect, relatable side of the royals is the side I just can't get enough of. I particularly love the image of Prince George being chased by his sister, Charlotte—who looks to be such an energetic, bold and, dare I say, cheeky little royal. Charlotte giggled as she tumbled down the hill and rustled through her mum's handbag in search of things to play with.

Kate, too, looked uncharacteristically carefree, perched on a muddy hill in fits of laughter at her children's performances. Hope you enjoy the issue.

Meghan's
BALCONY
DEBUT

Despite her reported nerves, Meghan looked at ease as she took part in a procession via a horse-drawn carriage.

NO COLD SHOULDER

While critics claimed Meghan's shoulder-baring dress broke royal protocol, it doesn't seem to have offended Her Majesty, who has invited the Duchess to ride the Royal Train—usually reserved for senior royals—alongside the Queen on a day visit to Cheshire.

George's cousin Savannah Phillips made crowds laugh when she covered the excited prince's mouth during the parade.

According to a lip reader, Harry is said to have explained to Meghan, "there's a fly-past and we all look up to the sky."

The Duchess of Sussex takes her place—but George steals the show

It may have been the Queen's celebration but all eyes were on the former Meghan Markle as she made her Buckingham Palace balcony debut at the annual Trooping the Colour ceremony in London on June 9. The beaming newlywed joined husband Prince Harry and the rest of the royal family to watch the parade through Buckingham Palace Square as part of the Queen's 92nd birthday celebrations.

Wearing a custom off-the-shoulder Carolina Herrera dress—deemed “inappropriate” by detractors—and a Philip Treacy hat, Meghan, 36, chatted with her sister-in-law Catherine, Duchess of Cambridge, and stepmother-in-law, Camilla, Duchess of Cornwall. According to UK newspaper The Sun's lip reader, Harry, 33, asked Meghan, if she was “OK” as they stepped onto Onlookers said Meghan and Harry looked happy as they mingled with the royal family.

Playful Prince George delighted well-wishers with his animated display.

UK newspaper The Mirror reported Charlotte burst into tears after dropping a picture booklet she'd been reading.

Charlotte rocked a pair of sunnies on the sidelines of the June 10 polo tournament.

"Nothing can really prepare you for you the sheer overwhelming experience of what it means to become a mother," Kate has said.

the balcony, to which she replied that she was "nervous." He was also said to have prompted her to curtsy for the Queen.

Stealing focus from the newest royal was her nephew and niece. Balcony veterans Prince George, who turns 5 in July, and Princess Charlotte, 3–7-week-old Prince Louis was not seen—smiled and waved at well-wishers. "They look very cute and [were] having a really good time," childrenswear designer Amaia Arrieta, who dressed George, told WHO.

The following day the young pair were again in good form when they attended a Gloucestershire polo match with the Duchess of Cambridge to cheer on their dad. While their mother looked on, Charlotte did roly-pollicies down the hill and George occupied himself with a multi-coloured slinky and a toy pistol. At one point, Charlotte climbed into her mother's lap while Kate rubbed George's back and chatted with friends, clearly enjoying quality time with her eldest children. It's "simple family moments like playing outside together," the 36-year-old has said she cherishes.

Among the lucky ones were the cast from Harry Potter and the Cursed Child, Parts One and Two, which was named Best Play, and Best Musical The Band's Visit, which earned 10 gongs in total. Andrew Garfield, 34, won for his lead role in Angels in America and dedicated his award to the LGBTQ community while co-star Nathan Lane nabbed his third Tony. Choking up, Lane, 62, looked to his producer husband Devlin Elliott and called him "the greatest blessing in my life." Laurie Metcalf, 62, whose show Roseanne had just been cancelled, won her second consecutive Tony, this time for Edward Albee's Three Tall Women. # TIM & ANNA

IT WAS THE FAIRYTALE conclusion to a love story five years in the making as Anna Heinrich, 31, and Tim Robards, 35, wed in early June at hotel Masseria Potenti in Italy's Puglia. "I'm a very lucky man," posted Tim. "I can't believe I got to marry the most gorgeous human I know! What a journey ... and it's only just begun!"

The couple, who met and fell in love while cameras rolled on the first season of the Australian Bachelor in 2013, spared no expense, an estimated $250,000, celebrating with family and friends at the intimate venue, which also hosted the reception and "Recovery Party" the next day.

The pair shared pictures of their special day on June 9. "We made a decision to put out some of our first photos on social media,"

Lawyer Anna was 26 when chiropractor Tim presented her with his final rose on The Bachelor in 2013.

"There's only one way to recover ..." posted Tim alongside this photograph.

AFTER-PARTIES

After their romantic Italian wedding ceremony, Anna and Tim celebrated their first days as a married couple with wedding guests at their "pool party madness" recovery bash.

Tables were dressed with eucalyptus leaves, white roses and Baby's Breath.

Melbourne-based Tobi sang at the reception.

"Anna wore a Fiora style Steven Khalil wedding gown that retails off-the-rack for $15,000.

Anna, a lawyer, told Stellar magazine. "For the day itself, we just want to keep it between us and our family and friends."

Once rings had been exchanged, Tim simply posted "Introducing ... Mrs Robards" on Instagram. His sweet dedication was met with thousands of well-wishes, including one from Bachelor host Osher Günsberg who wrote, "You did it! Congrats you two!" •

"I did it for this autoimmune disease that I had ... a thyroid issue," Clarkson said of her weight loss in a red-carpet interview with Extra. Just what did she do? "I literally read this book," explained the star, who is a fan of The Plant Paradox, a new dietary regimen that advocates so-called "clean eating," and reducing consumption of foods high in proteins called lectins. After basing her diet on the bestseller, Clarkson says "I'm not on medicine anymore because of this book."

The singer began a new eating plan that advises to cut certain types of wholegrains, dairy products, nuts and vegetables such as tomatoes—after being diagnosed with a problem relating to her thyroid (an endocrine gland that stores and produces hormones and can affect energy and weight). "She had already lost a ton of weight by the time I saw her in March," a source tells WHO, with Clarkson having lost about 17kg since becoming a Paradox convert. Still, the source says, "Weight loss wasn't the goal. This was an overall health approach." •

THE ACTOR WAS ARRESTED AFTER BEING STOPPED AT A DUI CHECKPOINT SOUTH OF LOS ANGELES

NURSING A GREEN JUICE—AND POSSIBLY A sore head—Vince Vaughn stepped out in Los Angeles a day after he was arrested for driving under the influence and resisting arrest. The Wedding Crashers actor was pulled over by police between Hermosa Beach and Manhattan Beach south of Los Angeles in the early hours of June 10 at a breath-testing checkpoint. Vaughn, 48, was taken into police custody at 4 AM, where he and his male passenger remained until posting bail at 7 AM, according to TMZ.

While a spokesperson for Vaughn did not respond to a request for comment, police told CNN that the actor wasn't "fighting with officers, but more ... delaying the investigation".

The Manhattan Beach Police Department had said it maintained a "zero tolerance" approach to drink driving. "The intent of the checkpoint is to encourage sober designated drivers," the department posted on Facebook on June 6. At press time no charges had been laid against the actor. •

Lawrence and Maroney have been spotted showing "PDA" recently.

THE ONE?

After splits from Aronofsky, actor Nicholas Hoult and Coldplay's Chris Martin, could Maroney be Lawrence's perfect match? "I feel like if I find that one person who I want to spend the rest of my life with ... I would absolutely not f--k it up," she said.

The Oscar winner is all smiles as she steps out with the man in her life

YOU COULDN'T WIPE THE GRIN OFF JENNIFER Lawrence's face on June 5 as the 27-year-old actress and new boyfriend Cooke Maroney, 33, took a stroll through New York after grabbing drinks together earlier. A source confirmed to WHO that the couple have been dating since late May.

"They looked very comfortable," the source says. "She is smiling like I have never seen her do with any of her previous boyfriends." The source adds that the two have "great chemistry" and were "holding hands and laughing" on their walk. A second source confirmed to WHO that Lawrence and Maroney were a couple after being spotted around the city "several times" in the last few weeks.

Maroney works in the New York art scene, reportedly as a director at Gladstone 64, a gallery in the city's Upper East Side, and represents clients like Lena Dunham's critically renowned artist father, Carroll.

For Lawrence, the romance comes a few months after her November 2017 split with mother! director Darren Aronofsky, who she started dating in September 2016 once production on the thriller had wrapped. On May 30, she attended the BAM Gala in New York, at which her former boyfriend was being honoured, and described him as her "very good friend." •

HILARY DUFF AND MATTHEW KOMA'S BIG NEWS

ACTRESS AND SINGER HILARY DUFF, 30, announced on June 8 that she is pregnant with her first child with boyfriend Matthew Koma, 31. Sharing the news via Instagram, the star of TV rom-com Younger posted, "@matthewkoma and I made a little princess of our own and we couldn't be more excited!"

The baby girl will be Duff's second child—she welcomed son Luca, 6, in March 2012 with her then-husband, retired ice-hockey player Mike Comrie. Following her divorce from Comrie, which was finalized in early 2016, Duff and Koma have been dating on and off, confirming they were once again an item in December 2017, when Duff said on chat show The Talk, "It's going so great. Timing is such a big deal ... Third time's a charm! As long as there's not too much damage done,

"We made a baby girl! She will be as beautiful and sweet as her mother," Koma posted.

Duff and Koma accompanied Luca to a party in Los Angeles on June 10.

ENGAGED!

AFTER A WHIRLWIND ROMANCE, ARIANA GRAND AND NEW new beau Pete Davidson have announced they're engaged. "It's a recent engagement," a source close to the couple tells WHO. "They're just two people who found love quickly and make each other happy all the time. It's nothing they've been hiding." The source says Grande—who split from rapper Mac Miller in May—and Saturday Night Live star Davidson, 24, bonded over "hardships" including his father Scott's tragic death on 9/11 and the terror attack at her Manchester Arena concert last year.

"I thought u into my life," Grande (with Davidson) instagrammed on June 1.

ALMOST TWO MONTHS after welcoming daughter True, her little “angel,” on April 12 amid the trauma of partner Tristan Thompson’s cheating scandal, Khloé Kardashian has made a public show of standing by her man, enjoying a date night together at a friend’s birthday party on June 9. Seemingly putting the past behind her—Thompson reportedly cheated on her with five women while she was pregnant—the new mum has quietly been supporting her beau of more than a year. “Khloé and Tristan were there together, they were sitting next to each other during dinner and there was no animosity between them," a source told E! News, of the birthday bash for friend, Savas. "Everybody looked happy, normal and like they were having a great time."

The 33-year-old's decision to put family first is supported by her mother, Kris Jenner. "You just have to be there for your kid and follow their lead," Jenner told Us Weekly on June 8, adding that NBA star Thompson, 27, was "Great. I'm not in that relationship or in that situation, so I really trust Khloé. She's so smart, and such a great girl, and she'll figure it out."

Forgiveness has long been a part of Kardashian's makeup. During her troubled marriage to former LA Lakers player Lamar Odom, the reality-TV star worked hard to save the relationship. "I'm a modern girl, but you should put your husband first," she told WHO. "I like to think divorce is not an option." But after dealing with Odom's drug problems, divorce became the only option.

Now Kardashian seems determined to build a happy family environment. "I'm so proud of that kid," Jenner said on The Ellen DeGeneres Show on May 4. "I get choked up because she's such a good mum." •

The couple arrived together at the Marble Room in Cleveland on June 9.

Kardashian and Thompson reportedly "had a great time" at the party she threw for their good friend Savas and about 12 guests at a private room in the Marble Room Steaks and Raw Bar.

The 'Sunrise' star is setting the record straight about being 'high-maintenance,' her love life and why she won't be body-shamed into dieting

resenting Sunrise is one of TV's toughest gigs. Besides the obvious downsides—the early starts, the competitive nature of morning television, the need to know something about pretty much everything—breakfast-TV stars come under intense scrutiny from the media and public alike.

Samantha Armytage, 41, knows that better than most. In her five years co-hosting Channel Seven's flagship breakfast show, she has become one of Australia's most talked about people. From what she says on-air to what she looks like in her time off, seemingly no topic is off-limits.

While Armytage is first to acknowledge that being in the public eye comes at a price, she's not about to put up with it, especially when what is written about her isn't always true. "I have had years of false reports around me," she tells WHO. "And I am fed up with them. Now I take them on."

In our candid interview, Armytage discusses the stories that frustrate her, how she deals with life in the spotlight, her attitude to dieting and exercise, and the status of her love life.

How hard is it to cope with false items in the media? One that continues to rear its head is that you and your Sunrise colleague Edwina Bartholomew don't get along ...

When you are in the spotlight, people are going to make things up about you. It does surprise me in this era, where women are getting it together and supporting each other, that still, gossip writers want to pit women against each other. They don't do it to men. I know men in this industry who have appalling falling-outs with other men over professional jealousies. Yet they continually make stuff up about the women. Most of us women get along really well.

Where do you think all that negativity comes from?

I don't understand the negativity. I understand modern media and there is a huge cycle to fill. And I understand there are gossip writers who have to make things up to fill their pages. It's a privilege to be in the media and I think people who write content should take that a bit more seriously. You can't just make stuff up. And I'm not going to put up with it anymore.

What about when it's the public themselves being vicious? How do you contend with internet trolls and the like?

How I get through it is I turn my social media off and I ignore it. I talk to a lot of young girls at schools about

BACK

"I feel quite proud of who I am and how I hold my own," Armytage says. "I don't want to be insecure. Aging in TV can make you insecure and I'm aware of that. I'm determined not to let that happen."

"I used to hate doing photo shoots because I was so bad at it," Armytage admits. "I'm still not great at it, but I sort of relax into shoots now, because it's just dress-ups."

empowerment and my No. 1 thing to them is don't listen to social media, shut it down, block the idiots, so I had to take a note out of my own book on that one. But it's good anyway for your mental health to take a break, otherwise it can get you down.

Do you feel more able to take things like this in your stride now you're in your 40s?

Oh my God, yeah. I am so much braver now than I used to be. I was raised by country parents who used to say, "You have got to rise above it if somebody is being awful." So I did rise above a lot of things. And then I got to an age and stage where I thought, "Hang on. You have got to fight for yourself!" And I have. I have never had to act like a man to do that. And I really pride myself on retaining my authenticity and keeping my femininity in a world that has been very masculine and aggressive.

Have you ever questioned your decision to be so visible and so public?

Occasionally, I will think: "Is it worth it?" I look around the media and think, "Who else gets the attention I get and is basically just a journo?" It is a bit unusual. I have questioned the job and my career choice. I never set out to do this job. It all kind of happened, and it's been a great ride. It's an incredible job. I am not going anywhere right now, but I don't want to do it forever. The hours are a grind and the attention is still, some days, difficult.

Do you think part of the intrigue is because people can see themselves in you?

I am not sure what the intrigue is. My girlfriends from school who have known me since I was 13 say, "Sam, we can't work it out. You're not that interesting." And I am like, "I know! I'm not!" Maybe it's because I am an average girl. What you see is what you get. Maybe that connects with people. >>>

"Eddy and I get on very well—we always have," Armytage says of Edwina Bartholomew. "I have supported her a lot, as has she to me."

In her downtime, Armytage exercises her Labrador: "Banjo has become the best little poser. He is now used to being followed down the road and photographed while trying to do a poo."

“I really pride myself on retaining my authenticity and keeping my femininity”

You look fantastic in our photo shoot.

Are you in the best shape of your life?

I have probably been in better shape, to be honest. Like a lot of other women, my weight goes up and down depending on my tiredness level. In April, we spent two weeks in a hotel on the Gold Coast doing the Commonwealth Games. Anyone who travels for work will tell you living out of a hotel is not conducive to weight loss. There are times where I think, “I could just sleep for a month and eat salads,” and it probably wouldn’t be a bad idea at the moment. But I know how to hide it.

Are you trying to lose weight?

No, I am not trying to lose weight at all.

Are you an 80/20 kind of person?

I come and go. I try to be good during the week. It’s a lot simpler—I go to bed early, exercise most days and eat well most of the time. I have to—I just feel better if I do. [On the weekend] I eat well, I love a glass of wine, I still have fun.

You don’t find you eat more because you are up so early?

I am actually quite disciplined as far as that goes. I have bad days, too. I am pretty routine as far as what time we do breakfast here. For my dog, Banjo, 3.30 in the morning is like a party. He lies on the floor of the bathroom while I have a shower, then he has his

FEMALE SUPPORT

Armeytage’s first TV job was as a reporter at WIN Television in Canberra. “Back in those days, there was no sisterhood solidarity. Women were awful to each other. So we have come a long way.” Today, she tries to ensure younger women have a better time of it. “As an older girl, I make a conscientious effort to support the younger girls coming through,” she says.

Armeytage has been working in TV since 1999.

breakfast—he’s on my schedule, ’cause you have to be in my house. Then, I have an early lunch and early dinner. I don’t drink during the week. I have discovered UpCycle, which is like Spin.

At a gym?

No, I hate gyms. It’s at a cycle studio and it has a really good energy. I do a couple of those a week because I feel like I need to do a bit of cardio. I like to spend time outside because we spend a lot of time in the studio, so my afternoons are spent outside walking the dog or catching up with friends, but no gym—I can’t stand the gym.

Banjo must be great for getting you out and about ...

He’s great fun and keeps me motivated for getting out. Don’t tell the paparazzi, but I’ve managed to find a whole lot of places in the Eastern Suburbs where they haven’t found me so I can swim in peace with Banjo!

Do you ever consider having a child or starting a family?

No, it’s not something I think about.

What about romance—are you seeing anyone?

If I was, you would be the first to know. I really don’t talk about that stuff, but I am fine and life is good. There are good things happening ... I don’t talk about anyone before I’m 100 per cent sure, because you have got to keep some things private. I give a lot of myself for four hours a day, so there has to be some stuff you keep private.

The Park Avenue apartment where Spade was found unresponsive on the morning on June 5.

Behind her happy-go-lucky flair for design, a dark—and deadly—depression lurked

In the airy Park Avenue apartment she called home, Kate Spade surrounded herself with keepsakes of laughter and love: dozens of family photos and silver cigarette boxes that reminded her of her late mother, piles of books that her college-sweetheart husband, Andy, savoured and among the framed artwork displayed floor-to-ceiling, her daughter Bea's creations out of construction paper and glitter. All of it resonated with the cheerful vibe of the fashion empire she and Andy had built.

But none of it, in the end, had any power to overcome the disease Kate quietly battled. Around 10.10 on the morning of June 5, a housekeeper arrived to find Kate alone—and unresponsive in her bedroom. She had died of suicide at the age of 55. While friends and fans reeled, her husband and partner of 35 years revealed late the same day that Kate had been in treatment for depression and anxiety. What's more, Andy, 56, had moved out 10 months earlier to an apartment blocks away, where Bea, 13, split her time. "We were in touch with [Kate] the night before and she sounded happy," Andy said.

Kate (at her Boston store in 1999) sold a 56 per cent stake in the company for $US33.6 million.

Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen carried Kate's "It" bag.

Mourning an icon

"I am heartbroken about the news of Kate Spade. I have worn her clothes many, many times. They were colourful, bold, cheerful and encouraged women to find the twinkly person inside them. You couldn't walk into her boutiques and not smile. Rest In Peace, Kate."

—Mindy Kaling

"Kate Spade was more than a designer. She had a quirky visual language that captivated Bat Mitzvah girls and artists alike. She was also a staple of NYC ...Thank you, Kate, from one of the millions you made feel beautiful."

—Lena Dunham

"My grandmother gave me my first Kate Spade bag when I was in college. I still have it. Holding Kate's family, friends and loved ones in my heart."

—Chelsea Clinton

"There was no indication and no warning that she would do this. It was a complete shock and it clearly wasn't her."

The incongruity between the successful designer-mum who, with her colourfully whimsical aesthetic, seemed to embody sunshine itself—and the darkness of her death made no sense. Shocked admirers from Chelsea Clinton (see left) to Whoopi Goldberg posted articles on social media about the alarming rise in America's suicide rates and shared memories of their first Kate Spade handbag. "Young women saved up for it," said Goldberg. "It was like you were Mary Tyler Moore; you felt like you could do anything if you had this bag."

Starting in 1993 with a black nylon tote—with a small identifiable label on the outside—Kate was a two-time Council of Fashion Designers of America award-winner. "Her collection was one of the most popular and brilliant," says former CFDA executive director Fern Mallis. "She was as adorable as her accessories were. She and Andy were very much in the front lane of the fashion universe."

They were at home in celebrity circles, too. Andy's brother is the comic actor David Spade; Kate's niece is Rachel Brosnahan, the Golden-Globe-winning star of Amazon Prime Video's The Marvelous Mrs Maisel. That Kate—who two years ago had opened a new chapter with a new line called Frances Valentine—could end her life was unthinkable even to those who were aware of her private struggles. "We knew Kate had her problems and demons," one friend tells WHO. "But no-one would have ever expected her to do this."

Katy Brosnahan grew up in Kansas City, one of five sisters and a brother in the Irish-Catholic brood of Frank, who owned a construction company, and June, a former flight attendant who died in 2010. Kate Kate's bags "helped shape the aesthetic of the time—simple but meaningful and functional," says CFDA president Steven Kolb.

Kate refused business offers that would take her away from Bea (in 2007).

described herself as "very shy" in high school. A journalism major in college, she met Andy when the two were working their way through Arizona State University at the same clothing store. She moved to Manhattan after graduation and, in 1986, took a $14,000-a-year job as an assistant at Mademoiselle magazine, where she collected handbags for photo shoots. "We sat next to each other," remembers then-accessories editor Elizabeth Perine. "There was something so wholesome and down-to-earth about Katy B. She seemed too nice to go on and become so successful."

By then, Andy had followed Kate to New York, "rising fast in the advertising world and a marketing genius," recalls another of Kate's Mademoiselle colleagues. Andy suggested in 1991 that Kate try design. "He just said, what about handbags? And I said, 'Honey, you just don't start a handbag company.' And he said, 'Why not?'"

Kate later told the How I Built This podcast.

In 1993, a year before they married, Kate Spade New York was born. Running the business out of their apartment at first, the couple completed the sale of their company to Neiman

Marcus in 2006, banking $US92.6 million. Baby Frances Beatrix—"Bea"—was just a year old and Kate took 10 years off to focus on being a mum. "It was so natural for me to get involved in my daughter's school, her play dates and baking," Kate told WHO in 2016. She was chair of a parent committee at Bea's private all-girls' school and would throw on a pair of yellow shoes with rhinestones for the morning drop-off run in her workout clothes. "It all sounds a little corny," Kate said, "but I enjoyed every minute of it." Said an acquaintance from school circles, "Kate was friendly with many of the mothers. No-one there had any idea she was struggling."

Looking back, maybe she did drop clues. In an interview with WHO in July 2016 on the launch of Frances Valentine, Kate repeatedly spoke of her tendency to fret. "I might worry a little more than others," Kate said. "And I definitely don't want my daughter to feel that way. My dad always says, 'Just float. Not every little pebble is a boulder.'" She also chafed a little at the loss of recognition during her break from the industry. Stopping in a Kate Spade store to buy Bea a skirt, the saleswoman asked if Kate was on their mailing list. "My daughter was looking at me like, 'C'mon, just tell her.' And I was like, 'No,'" Kate recalled. "But I loved, 'Are you on our mailing list?' I created your mailing list!"

As for the deterioration of her marriage, Andy cast it as a temporary break and emphasised after her suicide that the three of them still had family dinners and holidayed together. "We were best friends trying to work through our problems."

"I'm a worry wart ... I look at what's not working rather than what is"

—Kate Spade, in July 2016

Kate's friend, who requested anonymity, vouches for the split being amicable, at least on its face. "They had issues for a while, but you never heard them speaking poorly of one another. Andy is doing his best to be there for Bea and protect her from what is going on." While Andy works out with Frank Brosnahan his wish to have his daughter home in Kansas to be buried beside her mother (funeral plans were uncertain at press time), those Kate left behind searched for meaning in their grief. Her dad told The Kansas City Star he was gratified by the attention on mental illness and suicide: "Any talk that ... helps somebody else, Katy would have liked that." And David Spade focused on Kate's light. "She could make me laugh so hard," he wrote on Instagram. "It's a rough world out there, people. Try to hang on."

ANTHONY BOURDAIN

In finding indigenous food and untold stories, the rock-star chef brought the world closer

Anthony Bourdain, the celebrated chef who broke open the secrets of his eight years at prime New York eatery Les Halles in his witty 2000 memoir Kitchen Confidential—and subsequently became television’s go-to travel foodie with his No Reservations and Parts Unknown series, had spent his last days with his closest friend, Eric Ripert, filming an episode of Parts Unknown along the French-German border. “He was normal, normal. Just like himself,” says chef Jean-Yves Schillinger, 55, who entertained the men at his Michelin two-star restaurant JY’S in Colmar, France, on June 5. “I didn’t see anything unusual.”

Just three days later, after missing a scheduled dinner with Ripert the night before, and a breakfast that morning, Ripert found Bourdain unresponsive in his hotel room in Kayserberg, France, CNN reports. He was dead of an apparent suicide at the age of 61.

“Anthony was a dear friend,” Ripert said in a statement to WHO. “He was an exceptional human being, so inspiring and generous. One of the great storytellers of our time who connected with so many. I wish him peace. My love and prayers are

Former US president Barack Obama, who shared noodles with Bourdain in Vietnam in 2016, tweeted, “I will miss him.”

THE WANDERER

From presidents to refugees, Bourdain ate with everyone. "If I'm an advocate for anything, it's to move," he said on Parts Unknown. "The extent to which you can walk in someone else's shoes or at least eat their food, it's a plus for everybody."

Fans left flowers, notes and packs of cigarettes outside the now-closed Les Halles in New York.

Bourdain's mother Gladys told The New York Times that she had spoken with Ripert after hearing of her son's death and he said, "Tony had been in a dark mood these past couple of days." A source who worked closely with Bourdain in the past tells WHO, "It never struck me as peculiar, but it was as if he gave everything to his work and then had nothing, zero, left for himself afterwards. He was always very, very tired. He pushed himself extremely hard." CNN colleague Anderson Cooper, who lost his brother to suicide in 1988, choked up during a tribute, saying he was filled with "shock, confusion and sadness that a man who was seemingly having the ride of his life has now suddenly reached the end of his life."

Bourdain's girlfriend, Asia Argento, released a statement calling him "my love, my rock, my protector." Having met him in Rome in 2016, the actress added, "I am beyond devastated." His ex-wife, Ottavia Busia, revealed that she and their daughter, Ariane, 11, mourned their loss through music. On June 11, Ottavia posted a photo of Ariane performing with her band. "Our little girl had her concert today," wrote the mixed martial artist. "She was amazing. So strong and brave. She wore the boots you bought her."

Although known for going into war zones and politically fraught places to film, Bourdain conceded that fatherhood had curbed some of his more reckless behaviour. "Since I became a dad, I do feel some responsibility at least to try to live," he told WHO in February. "There have been times in my life that I figured I've had a good run. Why not just do this stupid thing: jump off a cliff into water of an indeterminate depth? This is something I've done on the show. In retrospect, I don't know that I would do that today now that I'm a dad or reasonably happy."

Bourdain's food journey began in New Jersey, raised with his brother Christopher by mum Gladys, a New York Times editor, and his late father, Pierre, a Columbia Records executive in a "pretty normal, nuclear" family, he said. "We all ate together." After dropping out of university to attend the Culinary Institute of America, Bourdain then worked in various New York restaurants in the 1980s, developing a drug addiction he would beat through rehab around 1990.

Then, during his time as an executive chef at Les Halles in 1999, Bourdain wrote the kitchen tell-all New Yorker essay Don't Eat Before Reading This, which would lead to his memoir and his first television show at age 44. And although he would go on to introduce his audience to food in different parts of the globe, he endeared himself to all through his sheer un-snobbiness.

"He was an exceptional human being, so inspiring"

—chef Eric Ripert

As Bourdain wrote, "My mother-in-law would always apologise before serving dinner when I was in attendance, saying, 'This must seem pretty ordinary for a chef ...' She had no idea how magical, how reassuring, how pleasurable her simple meatloaf was for me, what a delight even lumpy mashed potatoes were—being, as they were, blessedly devoid of truffles or truffle oil."

The 'Married at First Sight' star finds love closer to home: 'I have my happy-ever-after'

"Life is just more amazing for both of us when we are together," Tracey says of her relationship with Patrick.

g in IER'

Snuggled up on the couch with her venture-capitalist beau, Patrick Kedemos, at Sydney's Intercontinental Hotel on a chilly Sunday, it's clear the dramas of the past few months are the furthest thing from Married at First Sight star Tracey Jewel's mind. After being at the centre of the cheating scandal between her MAFS "husband," Dean Wells, and Davina Rankin, Tracey, 35, dated MAFS alumni Sean Thomsen.

In May, she split with FIFO worker Sean and has now reunited with her ex-partner and "rock," Patrick, 45. The Perth-based pair dated before she began filming MAFS and recently reconnected at an Anthony Robbins seminar in Cairns—and haven't looked back since. Says Tracey with a smile, "I have my happy-ever-after."

In Sydney to promote her new book, This Goddess Means Business, Tracey adds, "I have no regrets because it got me to this point today and I feel like everything is just aligning now. I feel like I'm living a fairytale, to be honest. Patrick is an amazing man." Accompanied by Patrick's two teenage children from his first marriage, the couple chatted with WHO's Amy Mills about moving in together, marriage and MAFS.

You two seem so happy! Tell us a little about how you reunited?

Tracey We are happy! Being in self-development, we were there [at the seminar] to discuss future goals and what you want for your life. It became really clear how aligned we were in our goals and what we wanted in life. It was perfect timing and really assured me that we are on the same page.

How is everything going?

Tracey We love each other very much. We are delighted to be together.

"She really has everything going for her," a very much in love Patrick says. "It is difficult to meet another Tracey."

Patrick We've always been in each other's lives since we met and we are very happy to come back to each other.

Patrick, what do you love about Tracey?

Patrick She's intelligent, she has a very good sense of humour, she's good-looking and she really has the ambition to do something with her life. She is extremely pleasant to be around and that's probably what stands out when you meet Tracey—she is very likeable. My kids are comfortable with her and she has this energy and vitality; she wants to live life to the fullest and that's what we all try to find. >>>

"When I met Dean, I gave it 100 per cent because that's the type of person I am," Tracey says. "I think everyone saw that."

"I was really hurt after [it ended with] Dean and then Sean reached out to me," Tracey explains. "I wanted to give my best to Sean as well."

MAFS DEBRIEF

"Unfortunately, what I found with Dean and Sean is that they told me they were ready for marriage and commitment, but they were not," Tracey says. "I signed up because that's what I wanted. I've always been a relationship type of girl."

"It's been a whirlwind travelling for my book tour," Tracey says.

BY THE BOOK

"People coming to my book tours aren't just MAFS fans—they are women who genuinely want to read my book to help their businesses," Tracey says. "That's amazing to be able to contribute like that. I'm really excited."

Given the public criticism she's received, do you consider Tracey a strong woman?

Patrick Yes, that's why we get along so well, because I'm not always going to agree with her! She needs a strong man and she knows, to a large extent, that I'm the only guy who could handle her. [Laughs]

How did you initially meet back in 2016?

Patrick We met through a friend. I was, until quite recently, the French consul in Western Australia, so I was invited to functions with senior politicians and everyone is married. I needed a date to come with me to an event, so I called a mutual friend and asked if she had a lovely date for me. She said, "Yes, I do!" Tracey and I clicked immediately.

Why did you decide to part ways in 2017?

Tracey It was just timing. Patrick is a very busy man and I was doing my own thing. Obviously, watching the show was difficult and I chose not to be in touch with him while the show was airing so I didn't make things worse. He was travelling while the show was on, so he kind of got away with it.

Patrick I think she needed to have this experience; it was important for her. Of course, everything comes with downsides, so it hasn't been 100 per cent positive but it certainly has been an experience that, despite what some people might think to be superficial, brought us a lot closer.

Tracey, how does your relationship with Patrick differ from those you had with Dean and Sean?

Tracey When you do that show, you can get confused with what is real-life and what isn't. I know Patrick is real but I couldn't say the same for Sean and Dean. Sometimes, I didn't know the difference between what was real and what was for TV or for media opportunities. When you're questioning your relationship based on what's real and what isn't, that is not normal. I don't have to question anything with Patrick because he's so stable. He is such a rock.

Were you hurt by the backlash you've received after breaking up with Sean and the suggestion you were with Patrick the whole time?

Tracey I've been criticised from jumping from one relationship to another, but guys don't have the same criticism going from one girl to another, right? I've done nothing wrong. There was no overlap between Dean and Sean or Sean and Patrick whatsoever. When I'm done, I'm done and I move on fast because I know what I want. What's wrong with that? Patrick is so supportive. He is really proud of me and the way I handled myself and it shows what an incredible guy he is to be able to get over that. It hasn't affected our relationship at all.

Patrick, it must be upsetting for you?

Patrick You never want to see people you love be hurt, but at the same time, Tracey has very thick skin. She has always been a strong individual, but this experience definitely made her a lot stronger and is what brought us closer. I am a strong individual myself. We both look at the situation as a growth experience and often say anything that doesn't kill you makes you stronger. That is certainly what has happened.

Do you have plans to move in together?

Patrick That is very much on the cards. We are going to travel a lot in the next couple of months but, yes, after that. We love each other, so it's not a question of whether things will occur or not, it's just a matter of taking things one step at a time.

Have you discussed marriage and children?

Tracey We have three kids between us. Before we can move in, we want to experience day-to-day life together as we haven't had an opportunity to do that yet.

—Tracey Jewell

"Patrick is so supportive. He is really proud of me"

We are just happy to be back together.
Patrick We all want to find the person we are going to spend the rest of our life with. If everything goes well, of course, that will be on the cards at some point but it's not like we are setting a deadline for ourselves. We are just happy to take life as it comes. •

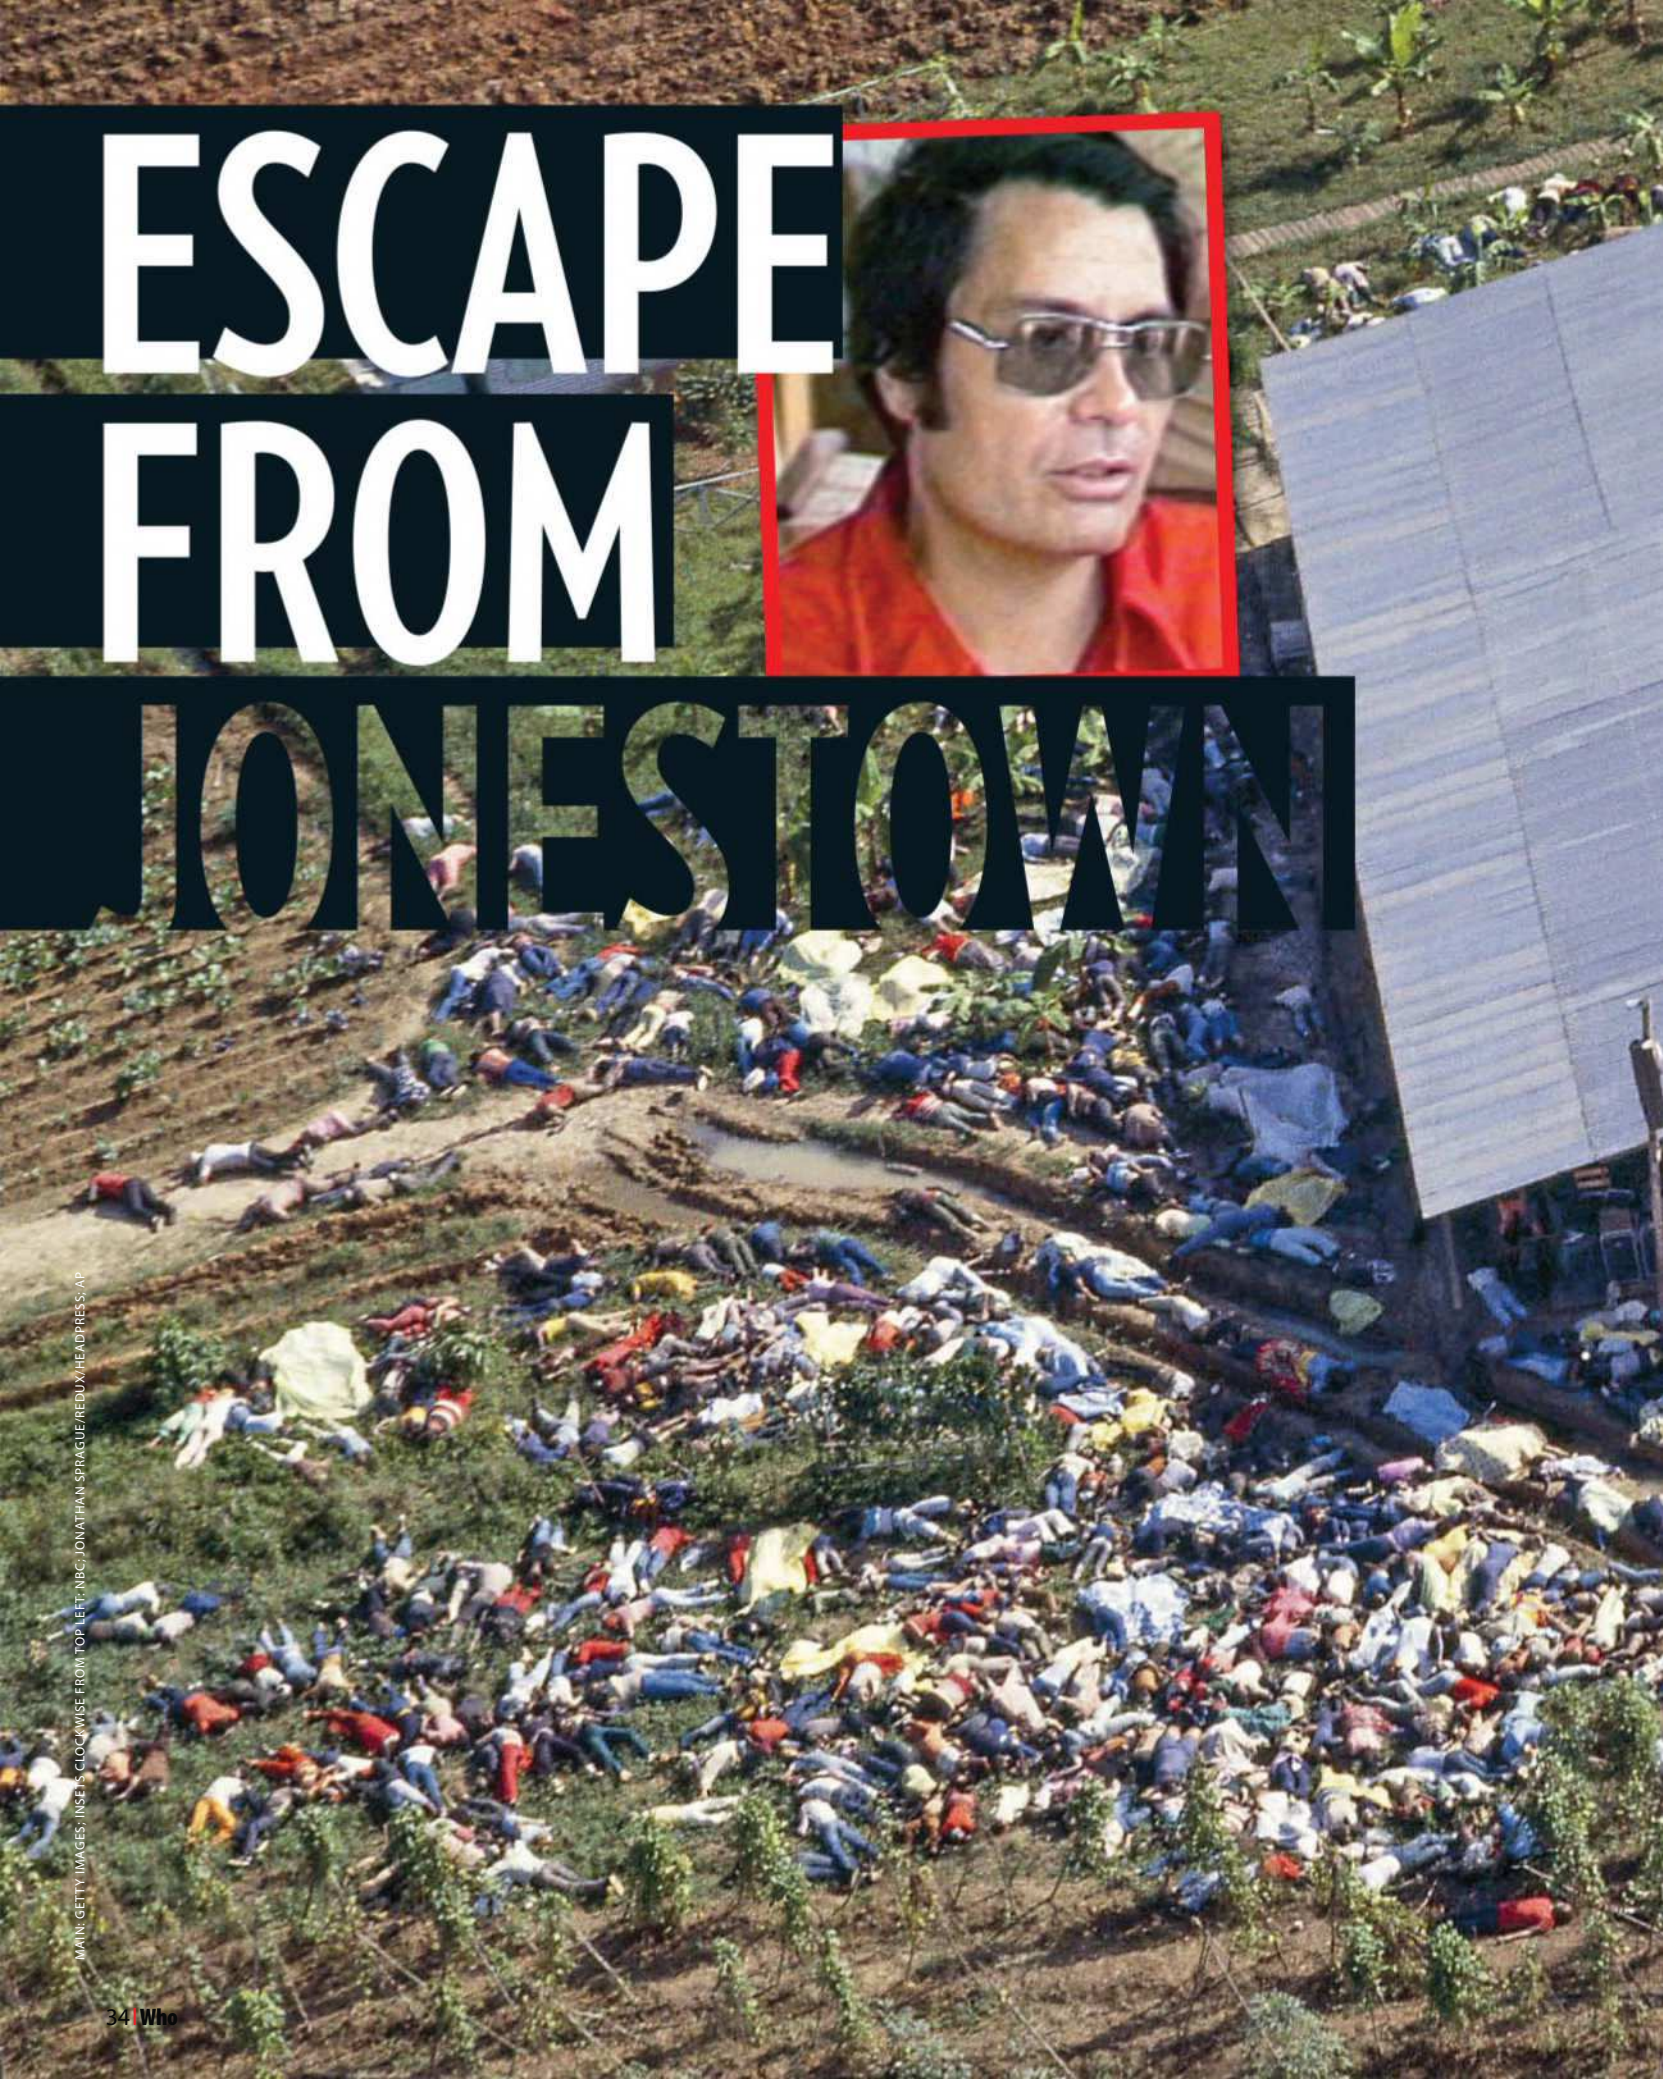

"Patrick and I are going overseas for a few weeks to have a break from everything and spend some time together," Tracey reveals. "I can't wait!"

ESCAPE FROM

Jonestown

MAIN: GETTY IMAGES; INSERTS: CLOCKWISE FROM TOP LEFT, NBC; JONATHAN SPRAGUE/REDUX/HEA/ADRESS/AP

Jonestown survivor Tracy Parks (inset, today and at age 12) recalls the horror she felt when she learned of the mass suicide in which Jim Jones (inset left) and 909 of his followers died on Nov. 18, 1978. "I knew Jim Jones wanted us dead," she says.

As a child 40 years ago, Tracy Parks fled the Peoples Temple compound just hours before Jim Jones led the largest mass suicide in history. Now, she's sharing her story

Tracy Parks knelt on the rain-soaked, muddy airstrip, cradling her mother's lifeless body, shaking her, trying to wake her up. The explosion of gunfire had stopped, but all around her the 12-year-old saw bodies—some dead, others bleeding and moaning. "Get in the jungle," her father, Jerry, screamed. "Run. I'll take care of your mother."

Tracy looked up to see her older sister Brenda, 18, sprinting across the runway towards the dark wall of trees. Before the younger girl knew it, she was right behind Brenda, racing towards the dense Guyana rainforest. "I was panicking; I wasn't thinking. I felt like I wasn't in my body," remembers Tracy. "We were so scared we just kept running."

When the fever-ridden, nearly unconscious sisters staggered out of the jungle three days later, it was into a world of almost unimaginable horror. More than 900 members of the Peoples Temple religious sect—the group that she and her family had been attempting to flee when they were ambushed—had committed mass suicide by drinking cyanide-laced grape punch. Among the dead, 304 children. Their bodies, along with that of their charismatic, psychotic leader, Jim Jones, lay rotting, 11 kilometres away in the intense equatorial heat at the group's compound, known as Jonestown. The Parks girls—along with their father, brother Dale, 26, and grandmother Edith Parks, 63—were five of just 36 survivors. “My brother broke the news to me little by little as the doctors were nursing me back,” Tracy recalls. “‘No-one is alive,’ he told me. ‘They’re all gone.’”

The Jonestown massacre—the largest mass suicide in modern history—made headlines around the world as a shocking example of how the followers of a cult could be brainwashed into evil. Hundreds of followers willingly drank poison—and parents forced cyanide-filled syringes into the mouths of children, too young to sip from cups. “This was a wake-up call,” says cult expert Rick Ross, “to show just how fragile the human mind is and how easily good, kind and reasonable people can be manipulated.”

Today, after four decades, Tracy—one of the youngest survivors—still struggles to put the “horrors” behind her. “This wasn’t suicide,” insists Tracy, now 51 and a California daycare owner. “This was murder. Those children didn’t want to die, and neither did many of the adults.” Meanwhile, her father, Jerry, 84, one of the few cultists who dared to stand up to Jones in Guyana, is battling prostate cancer and trying to push past the “guilt and shame of what I put my family through,” he says. “I’ve asked for forgiveness so I can die in peace.”

As far back as she can remember, Tracy’s life revolved around Jim Jones and his church. Drawn to the ministry’s eclectic gospel of Christianity, socialist politics and racial equality, her parents joined the Peoples Temple in the early 1960s, and by 1966 they and their three children followed Jones’s rapidly growing congregation from their home in Ohio to Ukiah, California, where he prophesied that his followers would be safe when the “nuclear bombs started dropping.” But Tracy always sensed darkness in the church, from the armed guards who stood watch over worship services to the way Jones would stomp on Bibles and rant against the government, often until two in the morning. “Even as a child sitting in these meetings,” Tracy recalls, “I’d look at all the adults around me and think, ‘What’s wrong with these people? How can you think this is OK?’”

Over time, whispers of Jones’s drug use and sexual affairs with male and female followers began to surface—and his need to control every aspect of his followers’ lives grew more intense. Jones began surrounding himself with bodyguards and took to wearing dark sunglasses at all times—he said it was “because he sees too much without them on,” recalls Jerry. The increasingly paranoid, self-proclaimed “god” had begun to lose his grasp on reality, “going from bad to worse to

1965
Jones moves his congregation to California. By 1972 he claimed to have as many as 20,000 members. Among them: Jerry and Patricia Parks and their children Brenda, Dale and Tracy.

July 1976
Peoples Temple member Grace Stoen defects, leaving her 4-year-old son, John (above), in the care of temple members. Because her husband, Tim, has signed an affidavit declaring Jones is John’s biological father, Jones refuses to release John to her. She files for custody.

Aug. 1, 1977
After San Francisco magazine New West publishes a story accusing Jones of financial impropriety and ordering physical assaults, he moves his church and followers to a remote compound on 1500ha of land in Guyana, taking 5-year-old John Stoen along with him.

Nov. 18, 1977
A California judge in San Francisco awards custody of John to Grace, with visitation rights given to Tim. The judge further rules Jones’s rights as John’s guardian are void and orders that “all actions necessary” be taken to return John to his parents.

parents and sister, reluctantly arrived in Jonestown in April 1978 (brother Dale and their grandmother had moved there the year before) and quickly discovered it was anything but the paradise they'd been promised. "That place was the closest thing to hell on earth," recalls Tracy. "The moment I saw that front gate I thought, 'We are going to die here.'"

Within hours of their arrival at Jonestown, her worst fears seemed to be realised. She recalls watching helplessly as Jones goaded a handful of followers into beating her father when he announced that he wanted to return to California. Tracy and the other children spent eight hours a day working in the fields, under a blistering equatorial sun, while Jones could be heard ranting in a haunting voice about his "enemies" over loudspeakers. Gun-toting guards watched her every move. "I dare you to try to escape," Jones, who by then had become addicted to a range of narcotics, would threaten his followers. "You won't last long in that jungle with the panthers and snakes." Constantly racked by hunger and exhausted from lack of sleep, Tracy lived, she says, in a state of "constant terror," but worst of all were the mock-suicide drills Jones called White Nights. "They could happen anytime during the day or night," Tracy recalls.

"We'd all gather together in the pavilion, and he'd tell us, 'It's not going to be painful. You just lie down and go to sleep.' Everyone would be clapping, shouting, 'Yes, I'll die for you.' He got off on the excitement."

Back in San Francisco, pressure from worried relatives of Jonestown members forced authorities to finally begin investigating Jones, who was being accused of a variety of crimes including abuse, kidnapping and money laundering. "I filed lawsuits to take away his property, and I organised relatives," Tim Stoen, a former temple member whose son, John, 6, was being held hostage by Jones in Guyana (see sidebar), revealed in a 2016 book-tour appearance. "I did everything I possibly could." By the time California congressman Leo Ryan arrived at Jonestown on Nov. 17, 1978, with a group of reporters and family members, the drug-addled Jones had become a seething, ticking time bomb. "He was telling us that mercenaries and the CIA were lurking in the jungle, ready to kill us," says Tracy. Her father—who once told Jones that "I didn't come here to die" during one of his suicide drills—says he remembers feeling that "something bad was on the verge of happening." "Death was in the air," Jerry recalls.

During a meeting with Ryan that afternoon, Tracy's grandmother, a longtime devotee of Jones, summoned the courage to tell the congressman that they were being held at Jonestown against their will. Ryan persuaded Jones to let him escort anyone who wanted to leave the compound back to the US. Fifteen cult members—including all six members of the immediate Parks family—followed Ryan and his party back to the airstrip. But before the plane could depart, the passengers were ambushed by gunmen sent by Jones. Ryan, three journalists and Tracy's mother, Patricia, 44, were killed in the barrage of gunfire; nine others were wounded. While Tracy, her sister and four other teenagers hid in the jungle, Jones summoned his congregation to the open-air pavilion, telling them that soldiers would soon be "parachuting" into Jonestown to kill everyone. It was finally time to "take the potion," he can be heard saying in a rambling, disturbing 45-minute audio recording found afterwards, urging them to drink the cyanide-laced punch that had been really bad," says Jerry, who left the church on two occasions but returned both times.

By 1973 Jones had become obsessed with moving his church to a 1500ha jungle compound in South America that he'd leased from the government of Guyana, promising his congregants, "This is paradise. This is where we're going. We're getting out of this dangerous world." That move became reality in August 1977, after a magazine published a meticulously reported story on Jones ordering the physical and emotional abuse of his congregants. Tracy, along with her

Jones supporters attack the group at the airport, fatally shooting Ryan, three journalists and Tracy's mother, Patricia (left); Jerry tends to the wounded as Tracy and her sister, along with others, flee into the jungle.

Nov. 18, 1978
Shortly after the airstrip massacre, Jones calls his followers to the pavilion and tells them there is "no hope" and they must all commit "revolutionary suicide." Armed temple members ensure everyone takes cyanide-laced punch. Some 605 adults and 304 children die, including John, the child at the centre of the custody battle, and Jones himself. Tracy and her group are rescued.

prepared in nearby vats, instructing parents to keep their children calm. "Don't be afraid to die," said Jones. "This is a revolutionary suicide. This is not a self-destructive suicide."

Jones himself died from a gunshot to the head, although it's unclear if it was self-inflicted or if he asked another cult member to fire the shot.

After the massacre Tracy spent nearly a month in Guyana before returning to Ukiah, California, with her father and siblings. But putting her life back together wasn't easy. Her memories of school involve suffocating panic attacks that often resulted in her suddenly sprinting out of classrooms and "running, running, running until my legs gave out." Other times she'd find herself "curled up in a foetal position" on a sympathetic school counsellor's floor, sobbing. Few people in Ukiah wanted to talk about Jim Jones and "all the hurt" he brought to their community, she says. The one therapist she saw told her, "You're going to be lucky if you're not crazy in 10 or 15 years."

There are physical scars as well. The dermatologist Tracy now sees every three months has told her he believes her recurring skin cancers are caused by the repeated blistering sunburns she received labouring in the Jonestown agricultural fields. Her sister Brenda died of pancreatic illness, at age 52, in 2013, having never been able to shake the horror of Jonestown. When they were escaping through the jungle, Brenda discovered she was covered in her mother's blood and brain matter from the shooting—a trauma that haunted her until her death. "I've always been a fighter," says Tracy. "Knock me down, and I always get back up."

Jones's followers were forced to turn over their passports when they arrived at Jonestown.

But Brenda just couldn't do that. She often told me, 'I wish that bullet that got Mom had killed me. I hate this life.'

Tracy, who spent much of her 20s using alcohol "to keep me from feeling," knows exactly how her sister felt but insists it's the memory of her mother that keeps her getting out of bed each morning. "There have been times I've wanted to give up, but I push through for her," says the twice-married grandmother of six. "I want her to be proud of me. I don't want anyone feeling sorry for me."

Every year on the anniversary of the massacre, Tracy places her mother's photo on a table by the front window of her house and surrounds it with lit candles. Her story has no closure, no happy ending. "Time doesn't heal anything," she says, shaking her head. "When I was a little girl, I used to stare at this sign [Jones] had nailed up over his chair in church that read, 'Those who forget the past are condemned to repeat it.' I didn't understand what that meant back then, but I do now.

How family put Kyle on the path to fame

HOLLYWOOD story

On the show, "I'm just myself, and I'm not embarrassed about it," says Richards (with Camille Grammer and Lisa Vanderpump).

Long before she became a Real Housewife, Kyle Richards was paying her dues in Hollywood, working as a child actor in more than 30 films and TV shows, including Little House on the Prairie and Halloween. Growing up in front of the camera was "all I ever knew," says Richards, 49. "I have no memory of my life before television."

Now the mother-of-four—who has been married to real-estate agent Mauricio Umansky, 47, for 22 years—is behind the camera, co-executive producing a drama series, American Woman, inspired by her "unconventional" childhood with her mother, Kathleen Richards, who died of breast cancer in 2002 at the age of 63.

"My mother was a single mom in the '70s, raising kids on her own," says Richards. "It was a crazy, fun, reckless time, and she was very opinionated and outspoken. I wanted to make a show about women coming into their own and finding their voice."

Kyle's sister Kim Richards, 53, who was herself a child star, has been supportive, but oldest sister Kathy Hilton, 59, voiced concern about the project.

"I would never tell anyone else's stories," says Richards, who insists the show isn't autobiographical. Still, it has strained her relationship with Kathy, whose daughters are Paris Hilton and Nicky Hilton Rothschild. Says Richards: "I hope when she sees the show, she'll understand. I love my sisters, and I would never do anything to disrespect them or embarrass them. I feel bad about that." >>>

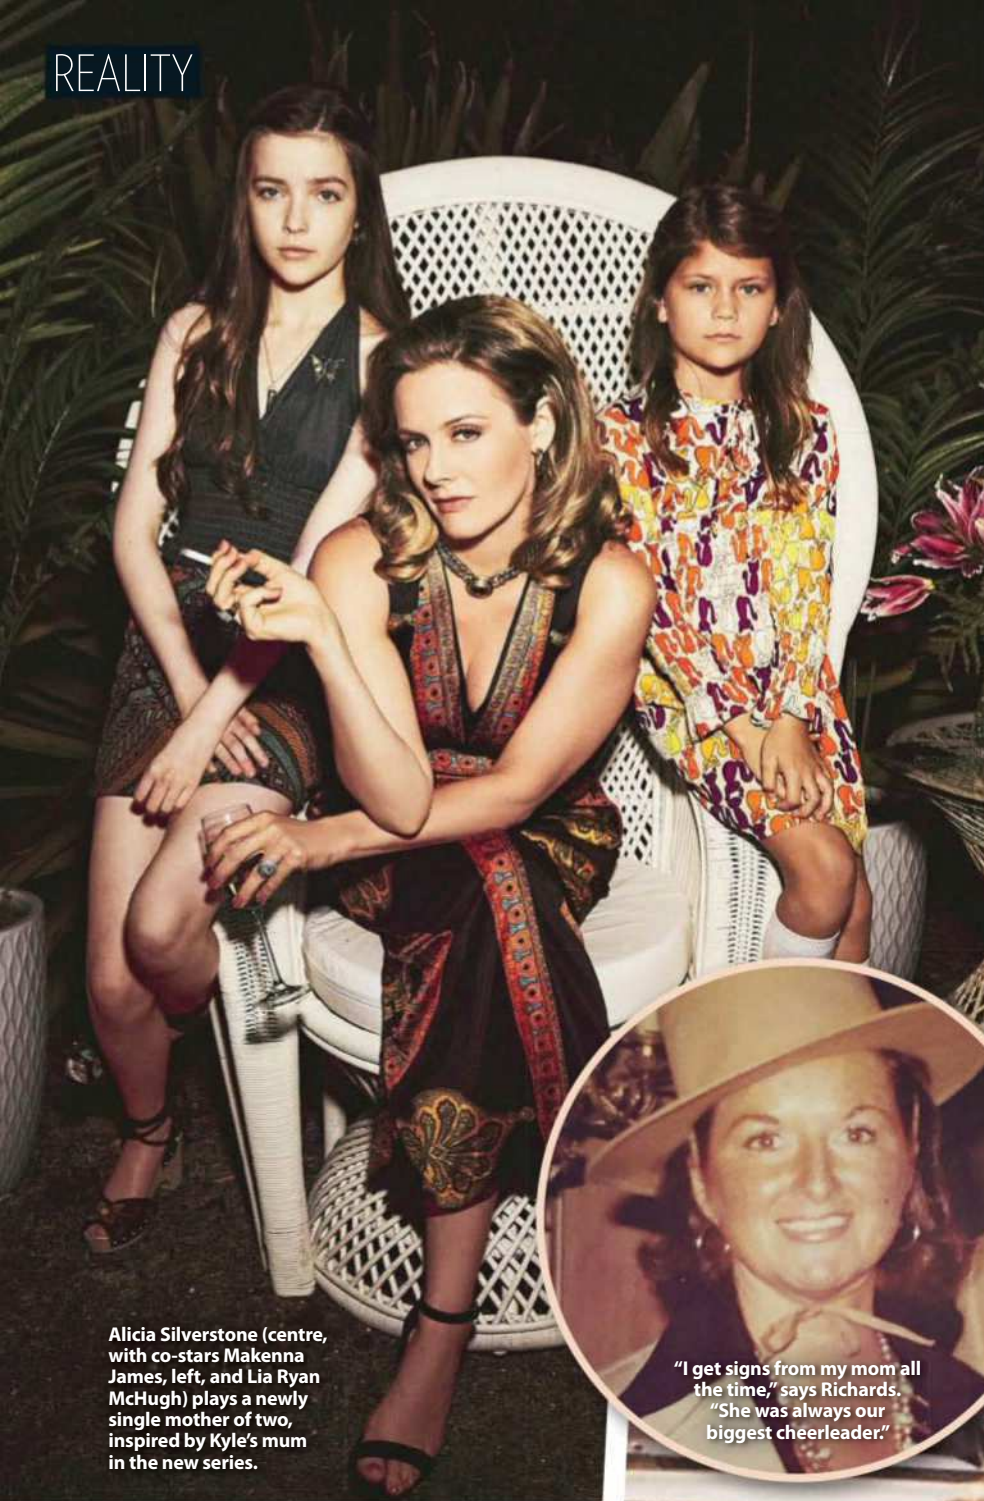

"She had a scary voice and drank champagne out of a silver goblet," says Richards of Bette Davis, her co-star in 1980s The Watcher in the Woods.

"I've done a lot of horror movies," says Richards (with Jamie Lee Curtis in 1978's Halloween). "But this is the one people always want to talk about."

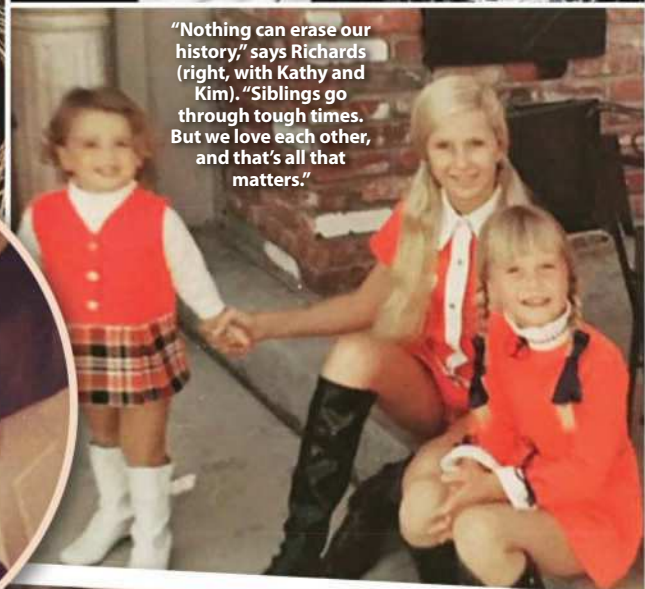

Alicia Silverstone (centre, with co-stars Makenna James, left, and Lia Ryan McHugh) plays a newly single mother of two, inspired by Kyle's mum in the new series.

Richards dated The Outsiders star C. Thomas Howell (in 1984) for four years. "We would hang out with Rob Lowe and Tom Cruise," she recalls.

"Nothing can erase our history," says Richards (right, with Kathy and Kim). "Siblings go through tough times. But we love each other, and that's all that matters."

"I get signs from my mom all the time," says Richards. "She was always our biggest cheerleader"

Richards is used to living through such family drama in public, but it isn't always easy. Last December, her Los Angeles home was burgled, with more than $1 million in clothing, jewellery and bags stolen. "The sentimental things from my mom were the most personal," she says. "I can't replace them." The experience has made her new series all the more important—it's a tribute to her mother that's as precious as any heirloom. "My mom always made me feel like I was the greatest thing in the world," she says. "Everything I have now is because of her. And I am so incredibly grateful."

■ By Aili Nahas

"My father was amazing," says Richards (in 1991 with businessman Ken Richards, who split from her mother when she was 3 and died in 1998). "He was super hands-on and loved to cook for us."

CHRISSY TEIGEN

Keeping

IT REAL

"You heard how cool we are ... and wanted to see what all the fuss was about," wrote Teigen of why Miles came three weeks early. "Well we tricked u! We are boring AF."

Teigen looked comfortably stylish on a June 5 lunch date with Legend in Beverly Hills.

The mum-of-two celebrates the good and the gritty

Unlike some celebrities who hide away post-pregnancy until their bodies are back in picture-perfect shape, mum of two Chrissy Teigen has documented most every aspect of life with a new baby—Miles Theodore, born May 17—and a toddler—Luna Simone, 2—best summed up by a June 4 Instagram post of a makeup-free Teigen cradling Miles while watching Luna play. She captioned it, "Guess we're really doing this kid thing!"

For Teigen, 32, getting on with life while juggling parenting and her career as a TV personality and cookbook author seems to be about not sweating the small stuff: prioritising date nights with Grammy-winning husband John Legend, 39, and days out with Luna, even if it means pap shots of her with a post-baby belly and looking a little worn.

In fact, the Lip Synch Battle host, who has made public her struggles with IVF and post-natal depression, appears to use the mundane nature of it all as grist for her humour mill, commenting on her stay-at-home boredom, posting

"Motherhood has so many emotions"

pics of stretch marks and oversharing in a May 19 tweet why her son has one-upped her daughter: "I can confirm postpartum life is 90 per cent better when you don't rip to your butthole." ■

Referencing comedian Ali Wong, "#asianpear-underwear," is how Teigen described her post-partum pants on May 21, four days after Miles's birth.

"My heart is now outside of my body," Teigen wrote on Mother's Day.

"First post-Miles date night!" Legend wrote on May 28, to which, Teigen commented, "pumpin tiiiiime."

"In my deepest, darkest post-partum depression, I would have never called a phone number," Teigen (with Legend and Luna on May 30) wrote. "It really can be a lonely hole. Watch the people you love and don't be afraid to speak up."

WHAT HAP

Is the Freak really dead? That's just one of the questions fans of the award-winning prison drama will be asking as the sixth season kicks off on Foxtel this week.

The main cast of Wentworth for Season 6 (back Tues., June 19, at 8.30PM on Showcase). Notable absence: Pamela Rabe's Joan "The Freak" Ferguson. Read into that what you will.

PENS NEXT?

Spare a thought for Kate Atkinson—she can barely go a day without Wentworth fans asking her what’s ahead for Season 6 of the Australian drama. Is Joan “The Freak” Ferguson (Pamela Rabe) really dead? What about Sonia (Sigrid Thornton)? Will she be back to further terrorise Liz (Celia Ireland)? And what will happen now that her character, Vera, has been rendered all but powerless by Joan?

“I can’t say! Honestly!” Atkinson tells WHO. But if there’s one thing Wentworth fans have come to realise, it’s to expect the unexpected with this series.

Though tight-lipped about The Freak’s fate, Atkinson says the future for Vera revolves around the fallout from those shocking final scenes from Season 5.

“There’s a big storyline that occupies Vera, Jake [Bernard Curry] and Will [Robbie Magasiva] later on, which has a lot to do with Ferguson’s death,” she explains. “I can’t say much, except to say it takes the show in this really interesting, psychological thriller area.”

We pick up this season with Wentworth in lockdown after the escape of Frankie (Nicole Da Silva) and Ferguson. Commissioner Chandler (Gary Sweet) has been sacked, and Vera is struggling to maintain control over an increasingly strained inmate population. It’s a powder keg just waiting to explode.

Atkinson, who has been a cast member since Season 1, says fans can expect these new episodes to head in a very different direction, partly because of the addition of three new characters: biker Rita Connors (played by Leah Purcell), hot-headed inmate Ruby Mitchell (Cleverman’s Rariwuy Hick) and crime matriarch Marie Winter (portrayed by Susie Porter).

“It’s a good season for everyone, and the new characters bring a whole new energy to things,” Atkinson says. “This is great for those of us who have been here for six seasons—there are all these whole new relationships to unpack. The show is always different, every season, and

IS THE FREAK REALLY DEAD?

That's the million-dollar question for fans—and one that Kate Jenkinson, who plays Allie Novak, says her character is just as obsessed with. "It's Wentworth, so who really knows?" she says. "But if anyone is going to be able to claw herself out of a coffin underground, it's Joan. Until Ali knows one way or another what happened to The Freak, she is going to always have that emptiness; that rage and desire for justice. She feels she owes it to Bea."

Kate Atkinson also refuses to be drawn on the subject, but, from a purely professional point of view, she says she always loved appearing opposite her on-screen nemesis, played superbly by Pamela Rabe. "We had a really terrific chemistry. She is just the most extraordinary professional, and so much fun," she says.

WHERE IS SONIA?

It would have been a nice happy ending for Liz to see Sonia neatly finished off by that poisoned tea at the end of last season. But is she really dead? Or will Liz have to contend with the knowledge that she didn't finish the job?

We don't want to give too much away, but we will say this—Sigrid Thornton was one of the actors present at the Season 6 launch a few weeks ago. We might not have seen the last of Sonia after all!

there's a different theme for each season."

This year, it's all about survival and looking inward—both for the inmates and for Vera and her co-workers on the other side of the bars.

"Everyone, ultimately, has to make decisions about self-preservation," Atkinson explains. "And Jake and Will and Vera, they have this moveable feast of allegiances, but they are all constantly thinking, 'How do I protect myself? How do I protect my job?' It all goes there a little later on, in amongst the other labyrinthine storylines this season—it's great."

For Atkinson, originally from Perth, filming Wentworth has been a blessing. It's allowed her to remain in her new adopted hometown of Melbourne, where the show is filmed.

Yet has she ever tired of playing Vera? "Every time you think, 'Am I treading water here and pulling the same old tricks out of the bag?', the material on the page stops you from doing that," she says. "A new cast member will come in and you think, 'You have just lifted the level.' So then that brings us all up with them."

Atkinson admits she never expected

COMING UP

FRANKY DOYLE (NICOLE DA SILVA)

This season sees Franky on the run, frantically trying to avoid recapture long enough to work towards clearing her name. She's hellbent on proving she was not responsible for Mike Pennisi's (Felix Williamson) murder. Can she persuade Kaz (Tammy MacIntosh) to help her do it?

VERA BENNETT (KATE ATKINSON)

Vera is now back as Governor. But with the jail on the edge of a riot, and investigators poking around trying to find the whereabouts of Ferguson and Doyle, will she even have an opportunity to do her job? This is a huge season for the character. "Vera is a great example of people who absolutely get crushed by their circumstances, but manage to rise above them," says Atkinson. "But she may well get crushed again—that is the tragedy of Vera."

LIZ BIRDSWORTH (CELIA IRELAND)

Poor old Liz. Last season saw her go to desperate measures to avoid going down for Sonia's (Sigrid Thornton) evil game-playing. She poisoned the inmate with liquid nicotine, but is Sonia really dead? Or will she be back to wreak even greater revenge? One thing's for certain: Boomer (Katrina Milosevic) isn't happy. How will she feel when she finds out Liz was responsible for her mentor's fate?

ALLIE NOVAK (KATE JENKINSON)

Allie made the ultimate sacrifice last season, swapping her place in the escape plan so Ferguson could get out. But will her gamble pay off? Have Will and Jake really gone ahead with their end of the bargain to finish The Freak's reign of terror? And can she finally move on from Bea's (Danielle Cormack) death? "So much of Season 5 for Ali was trying to bring The Freak down, and getting revenge," says Jenkinson. "This is certainly a new chapter for Ali."

WILL JACKSON (ROBBIE MAGASIVA)

Will was last seen heaping earth onto the plywood box containing Joan Ferguson. But the big question is whether he succeeded in actually finishing her off. And if so, how can he avoid detection by investigators looking into her disappearance? Will's got one hell of an emotional journey ahead of him. "What happens to Will this season is the consequence of what he did at the end of last season," says Magasiva. "How will he cope with the pressure; that weight of doing what he did?"

JAKE STEWART (BERNARD CURRY)

He's long been Joan Ferguson's puppet. Now she's no longer around, will Jake see the errors of his ways and turn straight? Or continue on his path of self-destruction and the downfall of his one-time girlfriend, Vera? This season will see Jake desperately trying to stay one step ahead of police investigators, and try to reconcile his part in the events of last season. Can he keep his job? It's not looking good.

Wentworth to last as long as it has, but she's thrilled that, six seasons later (the show was recently renewed for a seventh season), it has retained its quality.

"This far down the track, you go, "This is such a gift," she explains. "For me, it's just a terrific bunch of people to work with and we have a crew that comes back consistently, so it's a great working environment."

Even though, Atkinson concedes, the subject matter is sometimes incredibly exhausting. "We pride ourselves on doing a lot of physically and emotionally challenging stuff," Atkinson explains. "But because it's such a big ensemble cast, the workload does get fairly evenly distributed. The stakes are always so high, so you have to commit fully—it's very psychological, so you've got to mine that emotional stuff."

"But when it comes to the day, it is smoke and mirrors—we are pretending," she adds. "That said, maybe time will tell. Two years from now I might be having some kind of breakdown!"

Joey Slaight (with grandmother Randa Slaight, and, inset, recovering in hospital) "is so loving," says Randa. "He never quit. He gives us so much hope and encouragement. He's more than we ever hoped for."

A BOY'S BRAVE FIGHT

SHOT BY HIS MOTHER

Joey Slaight was just 8 years old when his mother killed his brother and herself, and left him with a bullet in his brain. Three years later, his family calls him a miracle

In the backyard of his Owasso, Oklahoma, home, 11-year-old Joey Slaight is chasing his 4-year-old twin cousins around a mini trampoline while they play one of their favourite games: monster. "I'm going to get you!" Joey roars as the boys scream in mock terror. It's a picture of suburban weekend normalcy, but watching it all unfold, Joey's aunt Andra Munoz can't quite believe her eyes. "I sit there with my mouth open when he's playing like any other kid," says Andra. "There are so many times in a day that I am amazed, that I say, 'I can't believe he's doing that.'"

In fact, three years ago Joey's family wasn't sure the playful, happy-go-lucky boy would ever walk or talk again. On Jan. 2, 2015, Joey was shot point-blank in the head by his mother, Morgan Slaight, 27, a recovering methamphetamine addict and schizophrenic, who also shot and killed Joey's 6-year-old brother, Jaxon, before shooting herself. Bleeding profusely, Joey was helicoptered to the University of Wisconsin Hospital in Madison, where a CT scan showed the .22-calibre bullet had lodged behind his left eye after ravaging the left frontal lobe of his brain. Doctors cautioned the family that Joey might not survive, much less recover any quality of life. But after three gruelling years in two hospitals and a brain-rehabilitation centre, Joey finally went home on March 31. Now living with his father's sister, Andra,

"There are so many times a day that I am amazed"

—Andra Munoz

his legal guardian, her husband, Jason, a high-school football coach, and their four children, Joey continues to defy the odds. "After the shooting we didn't think we would have 24 more hours with him," says Andra. "But from day one we saw miracles."

On the morning of the shooting, Joey was with his mother and brother at Morgan's sister's house in Montfort, Wisconsin. Morgan had been released from a psychiatric hospital the previous day—a stay ordered by a court after she had threatened suicide. "Her sister told me her demeanour that day was weird," says Andra. "And Morgan knew there was a gun in the house." Still, no-one expected she might turn it on her boys. Andra, at home in Oklahoma, got the news in a hysterical phone call from her mother. "I couldn't even breathe," she recalls. "I remember sitting there thinking, 'This is the day everything is going to change. Nothing is ever going to be the same again.'"

Andra (with Joey) says she hopes her family's story will inspire others. "You can't underestimate what the seed of faith will do for somebody," she says.

A CLOSE BOND

Joey (above, with his mother and Jaxon, and below, playing baseball in 2014) loved looking after his younger brother. "They were on the same baseball team," says Andra. "They did everything together."

When the family arrived at the hospital, the news was grim. "Nobody wanted to operate," says Andra. "They said he was too far gone." But neurosurgeon Dr Joshua Medow decided to take a chance on surgery. After cutting a flap in Joey's skull to relieve the intense pressure from his swollen brain, he removed all the bullet fragments he could and put Joey into a medically induced coma. Later that night, Medow was emotional: "I was like, 'Oh my God, what have I just done? Did I give him a fate worse than death?'" he says. "My wife and my 1-year-old son were sleeping when I got home, and all I wanted to do was pick up my son and hold him."

But just 10 days later Joey miraculously reached for a nurse's hand, "and it was a flood of emotion," Medow says. "We gave him the best possible chance."

It's one Joey immediately made the most of. After spending two months in hospital, he was transferred to a children's rehabilitation hospital in Oklahoma and then to Timber Ridge, a paediatric brain-rehab centre in Arkansas, where he spent two gruelling years in physical and speech therapy. He had to relearn basic speech—when he arrived, he was at the level of an 18-month-old, able to speak only three words—and how to regain use of his right arm and leg. His progress stunned his caregivers. "He defies all predictions," says Becky Mitchum, Joey's speech pathologist at Timber Ridge. "Joey suffered a catastrophic brain injury. You wouldn't expect him to have made the gains that he did." Now Joey is settling into a whole new routine. Andra is enrolling him in the special-education program at the local school and signed him up for physical and speech therapy sessions. His grandmother Randa

"Joey reminds me what's important in life every day"

A long road to recovery: Joey at the hospital with cousins Max (left) and Brooks. "A big part of his recovery is that Joey is loved," says his speech pathologist Becky Mitchum. "And he knows he is loved."

Slaight, a retired first-grade teacher, is teaching him to read again. The rest of his day-to-day life resembles any other kid's: he plays Xbox, eats dinner with his family and cuddles up with his aunt for bedtime stories.

He is also rebuilding his relationship with his father, Tyler Slaight, 37, a recovering addict who was estranged from Joey's mother at the time of the shooting. Tyler says he has been clean for almost three years now—"inspired by Joey."

"My boy Jaxon is gone," says Tyler. "It still hurts. I almost lost Joey. I made a decision to get better so I can be there for him for the rest of his life. I have a purpose now."

The one thing no-one talks about is the shooting, as they follow doctors' advice to avoid the subject until Joey brings it up himself. Pictures of his mother and brother remain tucked away to avoid upsetting him. No-one knows how much he remembers of that tragic morning—he has never mentioned his mother or brother by name—but the horror of the day is clearly lodged in his subconscious. As Joey recovered his speech, "one of his first words was 'gun,'" says Andra. Joey is also showing what Andra calls "flickers"—fleeting moments of fear, rage and sadness. "It's like Dory," she says, referring to the forgetful fish from the Disney movie. "He'll get a flicker of something he's super-sad about, but it's gone as quick as it comes." Despite the challenges still to come, "he's back," says Randa. "His personality, his kindness, his spirit, all of it is back." And that gives the family hope for the future. "God saved Joey for a reason," says Randa. "He has a purpose for him." Andra agrees. "As with every other miracle, we aren't able to put a limit on what he can do," she says. "Nothing is impossible with him."

After celebrating her 50th birthday last month Kylie Minogue shares the secrets to a youthful complexion and discusses her love affair with specs.

Have you been wearing glasses for long?
I started wearing glasses around the age of 21 or 22. I didn’t need them to see generally, but if I was reading for a period of time I would get headaches.

Which designer specs did you often buy?
Back in the day I would buy Alain Mikli, they were the brand that I liked then, or Cutler and Gross, which was a really well-known established British brand and I would fork out for those.
What was the first process in designing for Specsavers?
When I first worked with Specsavers, I just we could keep in the bulk of the range and then what additions we could make.

Can you describe the look of the new collection?

I think for the most part they are classic, my favourites are the "never too late" that I'm wearing right now, they're rose gold and I've seen them on a couple of my girlfriends. They look good. There are also a really nice pair of sunglasses that have almost a peacocky fleck through them, they are absolutely gorgeous!

Any tips on choosing the right frame?

This is where I am a letdown, I wish there was a trick to getting glasses. Take a friend! Take someone who is going to be honest. You need to have had some brain food or coffee before you go and shop for glasses. And I sound like an infomercial, but I really do think it's a good thing with Specsavers that you do get two for the price of one.

Advice for ageing gracefully, especially in the public eye?

There is definitely a time when I wish that God hadn't invented digital, I think it's great for when you want to study the wings of a Christmas beetle, but no-one ever needs to see their face in that detail. I would say what I have learned is I am very diligent with cleansing, I don't do anything too extreme but as I started working in TV and wearing makeup, I loved to get that face clean at the end of the day! I really think there is a lot to be said for a muslin cloth or face towel as opposed to splashing your face with a cream, cleanser and water. It's exfoliation but something you do every day.

Other products you swear by?

Sunblock, for sure! I love makeup and I love product, but I'm just not that faithful to any of them. The Elemis [product I] use instead of a toner—it has a slight exfoliating quality. If you have a good dermatologist that gives you the right treatment for your skin, [that] can really help.

AFGHAN VEGETABLE PIZZA

Serves 2-3, Prep 20 mins, Cook 10 mins

WHAT YOU NEED

1 small zucchini (140g), trimmed, thinly sliced	400g packet garlic Afghan bread
1 finger eggplant (110g), trimmed, thinly sliced	½ x 250g punnet cherry tomatoes, halved
1 small red onion, thinly sliced	50g soft feta, crumbled
2 tbsp olive oil	1 tbsp sesame seeds
1 tsp garam masala	½ cup coarsely chopped fresh parsley
1 tsp ground coriander	Lemon wedges, to serve

1 Toss zucchini, eggplant and onion in a large bowl with oil, garam masala and coriander until coated. Transfer to a large oven tray lined with baking paper.

2 Cook in a hot oven (200°C) for about 10 minutes, or until just tender. Remove from oven. Transfer vegetables to a plate.

3 Re-line tray with a sheet of baking paper. Place bread on paper. Arrange vegetable mixture over bread. Top with tomatoes, feta and sesame seeds.

4 Cook in a hot oven (200°C) for about 10 minutes, or until bread is crisp.

5 Sprinkle with parsley. Serve with lemon wedges.

SWEET POTATO AND BARLEY SOUP

■ Serves 4-6, Prep 20 mins, Cook 45 mins

WHAT YOU NEED

1 tbsp olive oil

1 onion, finely chopped

2 cloves garlic, crushed

2 tsp finely grated fresh ginger

2 tsp smoked paprika

2 tbsp tomato paste

800g sweet potato, peeled, cut into 2cm cubes

2 carrots, peeled, finely chopped

2 stalks celery, finely chopped

1½ litres (6 cups) vegetable stock

¾ cup pearl barley, rinsed

1 dried bay leaf

Salt and cracked black pepper, to taste

1 bunch silverbeet (800g), trimmed, washed, leaves shredded

Crusty wholemeal bread rolls, to serve

1 Heat oil in a stock pot over a medium heat. Add onion, garlic and ginger. Cook, stirring occasionally, until soft. Add paprika and paste. Cook, stirring, for 1 minute.

2 Stir in potato, carrots and celery. Add stock, barley and bay leaf. Season with salt and pepper. Bring to boil. Simmer, covered, stirring occasionally, for about 40 minutes, or until barley is tender. Stir in silverbeet. Cook, uncovered, for a further 5 minutes, or until tender.

3 Serve soup with bread rolls and sweet chilli sauce.

SWEET AND STICKY CHICKEN WINGS

■ Serves 4-6, Prep 20 mins, Cook 1 hour

WHAT YOU NEED

¼ cup cornflour

1 tsp chilli powder

12 chicken wings (1.8kg)

2 tbsp peanut oil

Chopped peanuts, sliced cucumber and steamed rice (optional), to serve

SAUCE

1 cup brown sugar, firmly packed

½ cup water

2 tbsp fish sauce

1 tbsp soy sauce

1 To make sauce, stir sugar and water in a large saucepan over a low heat until sugar is dissolved. Bring to boil. Gently boil for about 10 minutes, or until slightly thickened. Remove. Stir in remaining ingredients. Cool.

2 Meanwhile, combine cornflour and chilli powder in a large bowl. Season with salt and pepper. Toss one wing at a time in cornflour mixture. Shake off excess.

3 Place in a single layer in a large roasting pan lined with baking paper. Drizzle with oil.

4 Cook in a hot oven (200°C) for about 1 hour, or until chicken is cooked through. Pour over sauce. Toss to coat. Transfer to a serving plate.

5 Sprinkle peanuts over chicken. Serve with cucumber and rice (optional).

CINNAMON CHOCOLATE STREUSEL CAKE

■ Serves 8-10, Prep 30 mins, Cook 1 hour

WHAT YOU NEED

125g unsalted butter, chopped, at room temperature

½ cup brown sugar, firmly packed

¼ cup caster sugar

2 tsp vanilla bean paste

3 eggs, at room temperature

1 cup self-raising flour

½ cup plain flour

1 tsp cinnamon

¾ cup buttermilk

STREUSEL

½ cup walnuts

⅓ cup caster sugar

100g dark chocolate, coarsely chopped

2 tsp ground cinnamon

COFFEE CREAM

300ml tub thickened cream

2 tbsp coffee liqueur

1 Invert base of a 20cm round springform pan. Grease and line base and side with baking paper, extending paper 2cm above pan edge.

2 To make streusel, place all ingredients in a food processor. Pulse to form coarse crumbs.

3 Beat butter, sugars and vanilla in a small bowl of an electric mixer until fluffy. Beat in eggs, one at a time, until just combined. Transfer to a large bowl.

4 Add combined sifted flours and cinnamon and buttermilk in two batches. Stir until smooth.

5 Spoon half the mixture into prepared pan. Smooth over top. Sprinkle over half the streusel. Using a flat-bladed knife, lightly swirl streusel through mixture. Repeat with remaining cake mixture and streusel.

6 Cook in a moderately slow oven (160°C) for about 1 hour, or until cooked when tested. Remove. Stand in pan for 15 minutes. Remove side of pan. Transfer to a wire cake rack to cool.

7 To make coffee cream, beat cream and liqueur in a small bowl of an electric mixer until soft peaks form. Serve cake with coffee cream.

LUXE LA FOR LESS

Get off the beaten track and experience Hollywood like an A-lister

HOLLYWOOD

There's more to Hollywood than the famous celebrity bus tours, get out and explore it for yourself.

Planning a trip to Tinseltown? Forget roaming the overpriced high-end boutiques on Rodeo Drive, traipsing the Walk of Fame on Hollywood Boulevard, or taking a celebrity homes bus tour. If you want to see the real LA and bump into celebrities along the way, head to these low-key destinations that give you more bang for your buck.

STAY IN WEST HOLLYWOOD

West Hollywood is full of incredible hotels. Sure there's the ultra-expensive Chateau Marmont and Sunset Marquis, but our pick is the newest on sunset strip, The Jeremy. There's a rooftop pool offering panoramic views across the city (including Rihanna's house, just across the way), the design is modern and hip, and they do a great coffee in the café downstairs every morning.

Rub shoulders with the stars at the famous Chateau Marmont.

THE MUSEUM OF COOL

There's a huge array of art galleries and museums to visit, but our pick is the new Broad, a museum of contemporary art in downtown that is free to visit. Here, the average age of a visitor is 32. Expect to see some of the greatest hits of the contemporary art world including Andy Warhol's works and Jeff Koon's sculpture of Michael Jackson and chimp Bubbles. The museum is heaven for selfies. Kourtney Kardashian is a fan, having posed inside Yayoi Kusama's 'Infinity Mirrored Room'. Plus the building itself is a phenomenal work of art. Book ahead.

TAKE A BIRD'S EYE VIEW

Everyone will tell you to hike through Runyon Canyon in the Hollywood Hills, but for a less-crowded hike, take to Griffith Park above the Los Feliz area. You'll probably spot a celebrity or two, the walk is a popular daily fitness ritual for the likes of Brad Pitt and Rebel Wilson. Time the walk for sunset so you can see the bright lights of Tinseltown and the cosmos at the Griffith Park Observatory. It's free to enter.

FLY IN STYLE IN THE NEW QANTAS DREAMLINER

Want to arrive without any jetlag? Book a flight on the new Qantas Dreamliner 787-9. They've teamed up with the University of Sydney's Charles Perkins Centre to help develop the airline's new approach to long-haul travel, with increased cabin humidity and lower cabin altitude to prevent jetlag.

You might bump into the likes of Emily Ratajkowski, Brad Pitt and Margot Robbie at one of these hotspots.

THE BEST ROOFTOP BARS

Aussies Grant Smillie and David Combes know how to run a restaurant and bar, their E.P and L.P in West Hollywood offers a sensational slice of Sydney's take on Asian cuisine. Just after a drink? Head to the rooftop bar, which offers sweeping views of the Hollywood Hills. It's here that LA cool-set gathers for Sunday afternoon and sunset drinks any night of the week. Another cool rooftop bar is at the new Mama Shelter (pictured above) housed atop a 1930s building on the corner of Wilcox and Selma. Margot Robbie is a fan, she and hubby like to meet up with friends there for a sneaky afternoon drink.

TASTE THE WORLD

While downtown, head directly to the Grand Central Market to get your fix of food from every region of the world for cheap. The charmingly named Eggslut as well as the Bell Campo Meat Company, Ramen Hood, McConnell's Fine Ice Cream and Wexlers Deli are all recent additions that bring a hip edge to the market's food offerings. Or get yourself some tacos from Roast To Go, a stall that's been selling slow cooked meats, Mexican style, since 1952. Grand Central is a fave of Emily Ratajkowski.

WHAT YOUR STARS SAY THIS WEEK, JUNE 18-24

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 18

Hold your fire. Walk a mile in someone else's shoes and a potential impasse could be averted: take someone to task, and you may find yourself on the wrong end of a serious upset. The other side of this intense aspect is a passionate exchange of the most enjoyable kind. And who says both won't be on the menu? For more, phone 1902 261 655.

TAURUS

APRIL 19-MAY 20

A special event could be even more magical than expected and any difficulty will have a divine purpose behind it. Not everything in astrology land is perfect, however, and if something turns pear-shaped, move on as quickly as you can because the less energy you give a situation the sooner it will resolve itself. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Neptune has a part to play in the astrological narrative. Inspiration could be flowing, love could be in abundance and your sympathy easily won by a hard-luck story. Then again, confusion could reign and people may let you down. With this in mind, make sure you know the facts before you set off on a wild goose chase. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 21

How you perceive a situation makes a difference as to how it unfolds, so if you are not at all happy with something, try looking at it from a new perspective. Perhaps someone is opposing you not for the hell of it but because he or she is fearful things may change between you. Maybe you are the one who holds the power...For more, phone 1902 261 655.

LEO

JULY 22-AUG. 22

With Venus recently arrived in your sign opposing Mars in the relationship house, be aware the sparks are about to fly, one way or another. And it's not only relationships of the romantic kind that could be in the frame: a business association or a friendship could be about blossom or hit a rut in the road. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

VIRGO

AUG. 23-SEPT. 22

Over the next few weeks a relationship could deepen and you'll realise you have one of those rare soul-to-soul connections. Or you will start to question the future of a relationship, perhaps because the other person is behaving differently or being evasive. Whichever way this Neptunian coin falls, burning a bridge is not the answer. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

LIBRA

SEPT. 23-OCT. 22

Librans are the chief negotiators and diplomats of the zodiac, but you could face some stiff opposition this week. That opposition may come in the form of a complex issue or someone who is resisting all your attempts to behave reasonably. You could return to the problem another day, but allowing something to fester is not in your best interests. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

SCORPIO

OCT. 23-NOV. 21

Use this tail wind to take you where you want to go. If you're making a journey, what happens along the way or in a different place could inspire you to make changes in your life. No one got anywhere without being able to take a risk, and if you've played safe for too long it's time you stepped out of your comfort zone. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

SAGITTARIUS

NOV. 22-DEC. 21

Jupiter is working hard on your behalf. Unbeknownst to you, developments are taking place that will inspire success and happiness next year, and you yourself may be preparing for events to come in 2019. With this in mind, look for opportunities that have the potential for growth, and start laying the ground work. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

CAPRICORN

DEC. 22-JAN. 20

Mid-July may well produce a moment of truth, so if the writing is on the wall don't leave it any longer before making your move. This is not a difficult astro-scape, but it is powerful. Don't just paper over the cracks and hope against hope that something will come right in the end. A situation needs surgery! For more, phone 1902 261 655.

AQUARIUS

JAN. 21-FEB. 18

There could be hidden pluses to a set-back and unseen negatives to a positive development. So, take nothing at face value and look into the back story before making an important decision. Good people and real situations withstand scrutiny. Not being able to take a deeper look should raise a big red flag. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

PISCES

FEB. 19-MARCH 19

Neptune's change of direction could lead to a subtle shift in a situation, or you may experience a change of heart in the coming weeks, so keep your options open for the moment. Sometimes the things and people that initially fail to make a good impression turn out to be the genuine item—and vice versa. For more, phone 1902 261 655.

MOVIE OCEAN'S 8

STARRING: Sandra Bullock, Cate Blanchett

The Ocean's movies get a major, beneficial estrogen boost with the fourth instalment. More than a decade after George, Brad and Matt frolicked through Ocean's Thirteen, an all-star female cast (fronted by Bullock, Blanchett and Anne Hathaway) takes over for the most eye-catching heist in the whole franchise. They're out to steal a 2.7kg diamond necklace worth more than $150 million during fashion's own Super Bowl—the Met Gala. Bullock, who gets the most screen time here, is Debbie Ocean, sister to master thief Danny (that was George Clooney). She's fresh out of prison and eager to get back into the game for dubious reasons. The trademark Ocean's cool is amplified thanks to crackerjack chemistry among the ladies, plus an endless parade of looks and styles culminating in a climax fit for the pages of Vogue (Anna Wintour cameo? Check!). Rihanna is all fire as a hacker who oozes sass, but it's Hathaway who emerges as the ensemble's MVP with her cheeky, self-kidding performance as a vain A-list star. She's a riot—and so is the movie. ★★★★★ (Out now)

THESE FAVOURITES RETURN FOR NEW SEASONS

WENTWORTH

In the aftermath of Season 5's traumatic ending, Franky (Nicole da Silva) is on the run and the women left on the inside are in lockdown as Vera (Kate Atkinson) hunts for the officer who abetted the escape. Into that mess comes new inmate Rita (Leah Purcell), who has got herself incarcerated with a hidden agenda. Lock yourself in for a new rush. ★★★★★ (Starts Tues., June 19, 8.30 PM; Showcase. For more, see p. 48)

FIRST DATES

Dino is Mr Australasia, but he needs work to be Mr Right. (Starts Mon., June 18, 8.30 PM; Seven)

Believe it or not: the film is based on a true story.

MOVIE TAG

STARRING: Ed Helms, Jon Hamm, Jake Johnson

A Wall Street Journal reporter (Annabelle Wallis as Rebecca) is on a routine assignment to interview businessman Callahan (Hamm). Things go haywire when one of his childhood friends, Hoagie (Helms), masquerades as a janitor just to tag him—you know, the childhood game where the person caught is “it”? Turns out Hoagie, Callahan and their childhood crew have been playing the game for decades, prepared to go to great lengths to catch each other. But over the years, Jerry (Jeremy Renner) has remained, literally, untouchable. Now, with his wedding coming up, the gang are determined to get him, with Rebecca, sensing a real story, in tow. Riotous good fun. ★★★★★ (Out now)

INCREDIBLES 2

VOICED BY: Craig T. Nelson

ALSO OUT

Among the glut of superhero films, here's one with substance. Picking up from where we left The Incredibles 14 years ago, the superhero family is back fighting evil, before the government shuts them down (for all the mess they make). Enter superhero advocate Winston Deavor (Bob Odenkirk), who devises a PR plan to get Mr Incredible (Nelson), Elastigirl, Violet, Dash and a scene stealing Jack-Jack back on side with the city while a mysterious mind-controller plans to rid the world for good of “supers.” Gender roles, teenage angst and the empowerment of children figure strongly in this superb action-packed Pixar sequel that will captivate every age. ★★★★★ (Out now)—By Michael Crooks Elastigirl (voiced by Holly Hunter) comes to the fore.

Tag team: Isla Fisher is Hoagie's wife, Anna.

MUSIC

CHRISTINA AGUILERA

Liberation

No longer a coach on the US version of The Voice—hence an explanation for the title of this album?—former Mickey Mouse Aguilera has had time and headspace to work on her sixth studio album, her first in six years. Liberation showcases a few stand-out singles. There is the big vocalled #MeToo duet with Demi Lovato, “Fall in Line”, a performance of which rocked the crowd at the May 21 Billboard Music Awards. Then there is the catchy up tempo “Accelerate”, bringing Aguilera into the hip-hop cred zone with assists from Ty Dolla $ign and 2Chainz. And for the real big gun: Kanye West produced “Maria”, which borrows from both Michael Jackson and the Sound of Music. It’s an eclectic but interesting album. ★★★★★ (Out Fri., June 15)

Aguilera points the finger in Liberation.

BOOK

A PLACE FOR US

Fatima Farheen Mirza

A rich portrait of a fractured Muslim family in California, Mirza’s debut opens circa 2009 with the return of the prodigal son, Amar, for his older sister’s wedding. Three years earlier, he had left home, disgraced and devastated over the end of his secret romance with Amira, the daughter of his Indian-born parents’ wealthy friends. With compassion, this beautiful heart-breaker unravels the mystery of who may be to blame for Amar’s estrangement. Pack tissues. ★★★★★ (Out June 15. A Place for Us is the first book in Sarah Jessica Parker’s imprint for Hogarth)

DVD LADY BIRD

STARRING: Saoirse Ronan, Laurie Metcalf

If you missed this sweet indie when it was on at the movies, now is your chance to enjoy it at your leisure. Set in 2002, Christine McPherson (Ronan) is a typical self-obsessed 17-year-old—she rebels by dying her hair and asking everyone to call her by the moniker “Lady Bird.” She can be pretentious and brattish and not always the best of best friends to Julie (Beanie Feldstein), and her ongoing spats with her stressed out ma, Roseanne’s Metcalf, ring too true for every parent of teens who feel loved and loathed in equal measure. A keenly observed character study, deserving of more than its five Academy Award nominations. ★★★★★ (Out now)

NEW SEASON CLAWS STARRING: Niecy Nash

You can't outwit and outplay Russian mobsters without getting your fingernails filthy dirty, even if your legitimate business happens to be a nail salon. The women who work at Nail Artisans of Manatee County, run by Desna (Niecy Nash), learn this week by week. Season 2 starts with the arrival of yet another cold-blooded, overly lacquered bully, Zlata (the excellent Franka Potente) ★★★★★ (Now on Stan)

AFI In a pickle: Harper and Charlie (Deutch and Powell).

JUST ANOTHER IMMIGRANT STARRING: Romesh Ranganathan

Ranganathan is a comedy star in his native UK, but the laugh business is a new career for the former maths teacher—he says trying to get reluctant kids to learn honed his crowd-control skills. Having built his way up in a relatively short time back home, the father-of-three now wants to crack the US market, taking a camera crew along for the ride. The 10-episode docu-series, in which he suffers setback after setback in his quest to become well-enough known to fill the 6000-seat Greek Theatre in Los Angeles, is as dryly funny as Ranganathan's scripted stuff, and its cast of sidekicks, including rogue uncle Rags and newly-met burrito-maker José, almost steal the show. ★★★★★ (Now on Stan) For more Ranganathan, check out series 'Asian Provocateur' and podcast 'Hip-Hop Saved My Life' (Both now on iTunes)

Stand-up guy: Ranganathan.

NEW SET IT UP STARRING: Zoey Deutch

Before I Fall's Deutch co-stars with Glen Powell as Harper and Charlie, a pair of harassed assistants driven to the wall by their respective workaholic bosses (Lucy Liu and Taye Diggs). Desperation results in innovation and the young pair decide to matchmake their overlords, hoping that if they have love in their lives, they will demand less of their juniors. From organising the meet, to playing Cyrano to their romantically clueless bosses, Harper and Charlie spend a lot of time together. Can you see where this will end? As Netflix originals go, Set It Up is a cut above; a smooth, easy-to-watch rom-com that plays skilfully to the formula. More like this please—rack them up. ★★★★★ (On Netflix from June 15)

NEW SEASON

QUEER EYE

STARRING: Antoni Porowski

The Fab Five are back for more lifestyle interventions—and hugs—in the second season of the makeover show based on the early-2000s hit. With for the Straight Guy dropped from the original title, it frees the team up to spread the love a little wider, with a cancer-surviving mum and a transgender man among some of the people transformed in this season's eight emotional episodes. ★★★★★ (Season 2 starts on Netflix on June 15)

Who wouldn't want food and wine expert Porowski in their kitchen?

ONE TO WATCH

Smalls doesn't play far from type: she is model Suze in Set It Up.

JOAN SMALLS

The supermodel makes her acting debut in Set It Up. Before she conquered runways, Smalls grew up in Puerto Rico. "I was an outdoors baby—climbing trees, running. That was my environment." Now it's Hollywood. "I'm always thinking about what's next."

Smalls also has a swimwear line.

Family workout: Favreau (left), Totah and Holm.

NEW CHAMPIONS

STARRING: J.J. Totah

Co-created by Mindy Kaling, this amusing small-scale sitcom is about how Michael, a gay, theatre-obsessed kid (Totah), adapts to a non-fabulous life with his dad and uncle (Anders Holm and Andy Favreau), who run a Brooklyn gym.

(Kaling appears in the pilot as Michael's mum.) There are some nice touches: Michael appreciates the guys' lame attempts at decor, such as empty protein-powder jars converted into planters. ★★★★★ (Now on Netflix)

2018
CUP™

Field guide to

"The World Cup never lacks drama," asserts The World Game's Zelić, who will work with SBS football analyst Craig Foster.

Even without Italy this year, "it's a captivating World Cup," says SBS soccer host Lucy Zelić. She tells WHO the main storylines, and highlights for the Soccerroos, in the Beautiful Game's quadrennial tournament, live from Russia starting June 14 to the final on July 15.

What should we look for?

Can Germany go back-to-back? Will Brazil put the nightmare of 2014 behind them? And we will see if the hosts Russia perform with the eyes of the world upon them.

Can the Soccerroos advance?

The first match with France is critical. It'll be tough but not impossible, and a decent result there will set the team up for Denmark and Peru.

So their draw is competitive?

Very. France have some outstanding talent at their disposal and are, rightly, one of the favourites to win. Denmark had a great qualifying campaign and, in Christian Eriksen, have one of the Premier League's best players, and Peru is a dangerous opponent.

This is Tim Cahill's fourth cup.

What will it mean if he scores?

What a warrior Tim has been for us. The memories of Germany and Brazil are unforgettable. If he scores in Russia, he'll become one of only four men to ever score in four consecutive World Cups. He'll be coming off the subs bench and I'm sure, if called upon, he'll be up to the task.

Who are the key Cup players?

Cristiano Ronaldo is a true celebrity footballer, one of the all-time great players in terms of record and ability, but also probably the most marketable athletes in the world. Brazilian star Neymar was badly injured in 2014, so he has a point to prove as Brazil seek their first win since 2002.

How about Lionel Messi?

Messi is the best player in the world and will go down as an all-time great, but Argentina have been unable to win the World Cup while he's played. They lost the final in 2014 and this is Messi's last chance for the one win that will cement his legacy as the greatest.

England has had a dismal run for decades. Can they win?

I wouldn't list them as a favourite but they are a team revitalised under Gareth Southgate. The majority of their squad plied their trade in the Premier League this season under world-class coaches like Pep Guardiola and Jürgen Klopp and were in blistering form. They are certainly a dark horse and will be one to watch.

'LIVE IT UP'

DJ and songwriter Diplo enlisted Latin Grammy-winning singer Nicky Jam (right), along with Will Smith and Era Istrefi, to collaborate with him on the world-music anthem "Live it Up", the official song of the World Cup. "I'm so proud and happy," said Jam, 37 (née Nick Rivera Caminero). "I can say to my grandkids, 'I've made it.'"

SCENES FROM A LIFE

SETTING THE STAGE

As part of the Royal Shakespeare Company, a 23-year-old Mirren took the lead as Cressida in Troilus And Cressida at the Royal Shakespeare Theatre in Stratford.

FIT TO BE A QUEEN

She won an Academy Award for her portrayal of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II in the Stephen Frears 2006 biopic The Queen.

ETERNAL BEAUTY ICON

A 2008 snap turned Mirren, then 62, into a pin-up. "Of all the shots it was one where I had my tummy pulled in," she told the Radio Times.

THE LAST WORD

HELEN MIRREN

LAST GUILTY PLEASURE

Probably eating a bit of the chocolate at the Golden Globes that was in my hotel room. I just couldn't resist. I lurch in and out of self-control.

LAST RECURRING DREAM

I have a wonderful one of being able to levitate. Everyone looks up at me and goes, "How did you do that?" And I say, "It's really easy—you just have to think." It's a beautiful dream.

LAST TIME I WAS STARSTRUCK

Meeting Sam Rockwell. I was just blathering as one does about how wonderful he is. You know, rambling. I'm always amazed that they know who I am.

LAST WARDROBE MALFUNCTION

A long time ago a zipper got stuck, so I went in my closet and put on a dress that I'd bought on sale in an outlet store for $39.99. I was on about six best-dressed lists!

LAST MOMENT OF BLISS

At the Golden Globes. There was a real feeling of change. Nobody was told, "Don't be boring about women's rights—we don't want to hear it." They did want to hear about it. And that was pretty blissful.

The Oscar winner, 72, stars in the new movie 'The Leisure Seeker' (out now).

Dame Helen Mirren met her director husband Taylor Hackford, 72, on the set of his 1985 film White Nights.

In The Leisure Seeker, Mirren and Donald Sutherland play a married couple taking one last road trip.

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP LEFT: GETTY IMAGES (2); ENTERTAINMENTONE; JASON FRASER;

Mitchell tours from June 22–July 17. He plays the Sydney Opera House on July 6.

SOUNDTRACK OF MY LIFE

John Cameron Mitchell

The Tony Award–winning actor and writer, 55, who directed Nicole Kidman in 2010's Rabbit Hole and the upcoming How to Talk to Girls at Parties, will tour Australia for the first time with a new show, The Origin of Love: The Songs & Stories of Hedwig. The star of Hedwig and the Angry Inch tells WHO's Cynthia Wang about his musical inspirations.

The singers who remind me of my childhood

David Bowie was very powerful to me, and also Barry Manilow. There was a kind of showbiz-y, Broadway thing about him. I, of course, intuited his queerness, which was quite obvious. He was always a bit closeted but there was a song called "All the Time" that was very gay to me. He was a great comfort to me as a kid.

Live performance that had a great impact

Patti Smith at a secret show in a small bar in [New York's] East Village. I was dancing like crazy and I turned around during "Horses" and realised that no-one else in the whole place was dancing. I turned back around and she just sort of braced her hand on my chest like I was holding her up and sang "Horses" right into my face. She was like my buddy.

Go-to song as a DJ to kick off a party

I probably would start out with "High School Dance" by The Sylvers. They were kind of a Jackson 5 clone but they were actually really good. They were a family also, and they had their own Michael Jackson named Foster Sylvers, who had a great song called "Misdemeanor".

First album I ever bought

Elton John's Captain Fantastic. It has some classic tunes like "Someone Saved My Life Tonight", which was based on him about to marry a woman!

Kruger.

THE VOICE'S FINAL 4

Host Sonia Kruger assesses the singers ahead of the show's June 17 finale

BELLA PAIGE

Coach Kelly called her a ballad queen. "While she's the youngest in the final four, Bella is also the most experienced in a competitive arena having done 'Junior Eurovision' and 'The Voice Kids'."

SHELDON RILEY

Team George's creative crooner "is definitely the boldest character in the Grand Finale, but he also has one of the most powerful voices in the competition."

SAM PERRY

The Perth loop artist from Team Kelly "is without a doubt the most controversial and unique artist we've ever had on 'The Voice,' which could either work for or against him!"

AYDAN CALAFIORE

Team Joe's 'Young Talent Time' vet is a "breakout popstar—he's got youth and exuberance on his side, and he's not afraid to take physical performance risks."

KID TALK FROM...

Armitage portrays Big Bang Theory's resident know-it-all, Sheldon Cooper, as a tyke.

The 9-year-old actor, who played Ziggy Chapman in Big Little Lies, tells WHO's Deborah Grunfeld about his series Young Sheldon (Mondays at 7.30 PM on Nine).

Are you similar to Sheldon?

I am like him because we are both passionate about the things we like, but I am not nearly as smart as he is. Also,

I think he finds it difficult to understand people and I really love being around people.

Did Big Bang Theory's Jim Parsons give you any advice?

Mr Jim was very helpful and he is the world's greatest Sheldon expert. [His help] was great.

Are you good at bow ties?

I love wearing bow ties, but I wear the ones that are pre-tied.

TOUGH ASK WITH ...

AMBER SHERLOCK

More than a year since a tense off-air exchange involving Sherlock was leaked, went viral and became known as Jacketgate, the Nine News Now presenter, 42, sits down for a tough ask with WHO contributor Shannon Molloy.

What's the biggest misconception someone may have of you?

That I live a glamorous life. The reality is that I work full-time and have two small children. Most nights I am up to my elbows in homework, bed-time stories, washing and packing lunches.

How often do people bring up Jacketgate and does it upset you?

Not much any more, and if they do, it's usually in good humour. I think Jacketgate is part of the Australian vernacular now!

If you had $1 million to give to charity, which one would you choose and why?

I would split it between Miracle Babies and Humpty Dumpty Foundation. My daughter was born six weeks premature and both these organisations are doing amazing work providing vital support and equipment for sick kids and their families around Australia.

Declutter or collect?

I'm definitely a collector. I have a whole storage space full of stuff. I love stuff.

What was your favourite toy as a child?

Not quite a toy but I had this vinyl ABBA bag I used to take to kindy. I loved that bag. I took it everywhere.

So what's in your handbag right now?

A phone, wallet, makeup, hard-copy diary, receipts, musical-theatre stubs, five biros, a water bottle, and children's bits and pieces. I have a very big handbag!

Gosling plays Neil Armstrong around the time of the 1969 moon landing in First Man, directed by fellow Oscar winner Damien Chazelle.

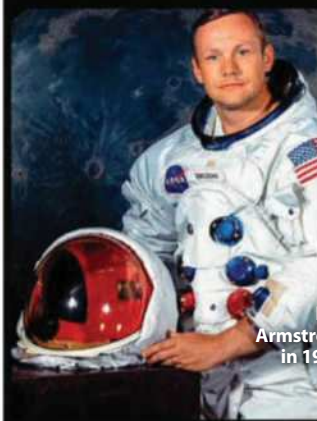

Sneak Peek!

RYAN GOSLING GOES TO SPACE

Canadian actor Gosling sees stars.

Neil Armstrong in 1968.

Claire Foy plays Armstrong's first wife, Janet.

Ryan Gosling re-teams with La La Land director Damien Chazelle to bring the legend of Neil Armstrong, the first man to walk on the moon, to the big screen in First Man. "We wanted to tell the story about one of the most epic accomplishments in human history but root it very much in the intimate day-to-day details of what it was actually like to be Neil at that moment in time," says Chazelle, who approached Gosling about this role before asking him to star in La La Land. Playing the astronaut in the historical drama (Oct. 11) came easily to Gosling, 37. "What fascinated me about Armstrong is that for someone who accomplished one of the most famous things that anyone has ever accomplished, the man himself is a little bit of an enigma," Chazelle, 33, adds. "Ryan is able to capture that quiet heroism."

Jain Armitage

I also love wearing ties, and I can tie my own. I am working on learning different knots. I don't have a lot of input on my clothes, but I like that Sheldon dresses up a little more than most people because I like to do that, too. How are you doing at school? I am learning a lot of new vocabulary words.

With brother Georgie (Montana Jordan) and grown-up Sheldon (Jim Parsons, right).
