GOLD COIN SURVIVES CONTROVERSY Drives Investor & Collector Demand

In 1908, this gold coin sparked controversy across our nation because people feared germs spreading from the coin's innovative recessed design. Over a century later, that unfounded fear has resulted in the Indian Head quarter eagle ($2.50) becoming a series pursued by investors & collectors with relatively few examples surviving in higher grades!

- ▶ First $2.50 design to have the motto "In God We Trust"
- ▶ First U.S. coin design struck with a fascinating incuse design
- ▶ First U.S. coin design that used a true Native American model
- ▶ First U.S. coin design by Bela Lyon Pratt, pupil of the famous designer Augustus Saint-Gaudens
- ▶ One of the most popular & historic coins of the 20th Century

$2.50 Indian short sets available in dates 1925-D, 1926, 1927, 1928 & 1929 includes 5 coins for $2,550

OPTIONAL MONTHLY ACQUISITION PROGRAM

$47.50 to $10,000 GETS YOUR STARTED
HEADQUARTERS FOR ALL YOUR NUMISMATIC NEEDS

PLEASE READ THIS SPECIAL MESSAGE FROM OUR PRESIDENT:

To our valued Clientele:

We are offering a large selection of quality coins, currency, stamps, baseball cards in carefully assembled lots, at far less than you might expect to pay if acquired individually from our higher priced retail competitors. Unlike similar offerings, you may select the exact category and price to fit your individual needs. All lots may be ordered on a one time or monthly basis.

When you join the monthly program, you can increase, decrease, change, or cancel at any time. After your first purchase, we'll bill you in advance, or better yet, use your Mastercard/Visa to avoid billing delays. Receive a free B.U. Peace Dollar when you join and a free month of your valuable coins after every 10 months of paid membership. (Yes, we keep records to avoid duplication) Postage, handling, B.U. Peace Dollar, record keeping are all included in the special price you pay.

Our special prices are designed to deliver fair value. In my experience, you might pay roughly double from some retailers; but retail prices can vary considerably in catalogs, ads, price guides, etc. Opinions as to grade, retail, wholesale, fair value, etc., ultimately are just that, opinions.

I, myself, have been an avid collector for over 50 years and a dealer for over 30 years. Like you, I understand the importance of receiving fair value for money spent. As a dealer offering a no-obligation monthly program (cancel at any time), it's essential to keep you satisfied each and every month. Our firm has prospered thanks to our many loyal customers.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES IN BUYING OUR QUALITY DISCOUNT LOTS

Advertising these coins individually would require over 30 pages of expensive ad costs. By condensing to two pages, we can sell the same material and pass the savings to you.

MONTHLY ACQUISITION PROGRAM

We will send monthly discount lots of all different coins in the amount and categories of your choice. You will be billed in advance each month or use your credit card to avoid billing delays. As always, the return privilege is yours as is the option to increase, decrease, change or cancel at any time. Act now to build/upgrade your dream collection!

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER

Receive a FREE BU Peace Dollar when you join the monthly program. After every ten months of membership, we'll send you coins in the eleventh month absolutely free.

ACT NOW! YOUR 100% SATISFACTION IS GUARANTEED AND BACKED BY A FULL 2 WEEK RETURN PRIVILEGE!!!

It's News to Me

by Donn Pearlman

MISSSED OPPORTUNITIES

Editor's Note: Long-time collector and former award-winning Chicago broadcaster Donn Pearlman joins COINage as a monthly columnist. He is a recipient of the American Numismatic Association's Farran Zerbe Award and the Numismatic Literary Guild's Clemy, the highest honors given by those two organizations.

The old phrase "hindsight is 20/20" is certainly true in numismatics. It's hard to predict the future, but easy to know what should have been done after something has already happened.

Numismatics is filled with missed opportunities, like saying to yourself, "I should have sold my complete set of 1984 Los Angeles Olympics transit fare tokens before the games started." Or, "Why didn't I buy that 1913 Liberty Head nickel in 1967 when it was only $46,000?" Or, "Gee, I sure wish I had $46,000 back in 1967, and come to think of it, I sure wish I had $46,000 stashed in the socks drawer now so I could buy coins."

One of the few frustrations I have about coin collecting involves missed opportunities. Not just looking back at the times when I should have purchased or sold something, but also seeing opportunities that others have missed in the hobby. Here are a few examples.

In 1979 the United States Mint launched a big marketing and advertising campaign to introduce the Susan B. Anthony dollar, a coin still derisively referred to by some collectors today as the "Susan B. Agony". The original obverse design for that new dollar, beautifully crafted by then-Chief Mint Engraver Frank Gasparro, was an updated version of a Flowing Hair "Miss Liberty". It was a distinctive design that should not have been mistaken for the George Washington quarter dollars.

But Congress demanded that the design on a new dollar coin should be a historical, not allegorical, female. Congress also refused to authorize a halt to the production of one-dollar denomination notes. The result: Hundreds of millions of unwanted, unpopular Anthony dollars piled up in storage for decades. Other countries around the world learned from the USA's missed opportunity to stop printing paper dollars, or the equivalent lowest denomination notes, when they subsequently introduced coins of that denomination into circulation.

The same missed opportunity for a circulating dollar coin happened in 2000, with the gold-colored Sacajawea dollars. Congress again opposed elimination of the dollar bill. Even though the Mint delightfully hired Kermit the Frog as "spokesfrog" to promote the new coins, they failed to circulate because there was no compelling reason to use them in daily commerce.

The biggest missed opportunity in numismatics, in my opinion, was the lack of greater dealer promotion of and involvement with the wildly successful 50 State Quarters® program that started in 1999.

At one point during the 10-year program, the Mint estimated that 140 million people were collecting the coins. But when the public visited coin shops—there were many more of them back in the late 1990s and early 2000s—or coin shows, apparently not enough dealers took advantage of the public's interest and the excellent opportunity the Mint provided to raise awareness of numismatics. Sure, some dealers sold or gave away holders and coin boards for housing the state quarters, but it seems that not enough of them persuasively tried to turn casual buyers into numismatists by merely asking eager new customers, "Would you like to see what quarter dollars looked like 100 years ago?"

How many of those tens of millions of state quarter collectors could have been attracted to the long-term enjoyment of numismatics by simply starting with a three-coin type set of a Barber, Standing Liberty, and pre-1964 silver Washington quarter?

All collectors and dealers have an upcoming chance to vigorously promote the hobby. National Coin Week is April 15–21, 2018. Don't let it be a missed opportunity.

Until next month, remember my motto: "If it happens in numismatics, it's news to me." ☺

BITCOIN IS NEARING A BUBBLE TOP, WHILE GOLD IS GROWING STEADILY

In late October 2017, the Chicago Mercantile Group (CME), the world's biggest exchange group, said that it plans to launch a futures contract for bitcoin, a worldwide cryptocurrency and digital payment system, by the end of 2017—a very fast-track launch. At the time of that announcement, bitcoins sold for $6,000 each, but the price of bitcoins soared 20% in the next two days, surpassing $7,300. Novice investors are looking at bitcoin as a replacement for the historical role of gold, but they can take a lesson from long-time gold bugs about how “bubbles” are created.

In August 1974, shortly after United States President Richard M. Nixon resigned, his successor, President Gerald R. Ford, signed a bill allowing Americans to own gold by the end of 1974. In the intervening months, foreign buyers poured money into gold, doubling its price from $95 per ounce to $197 per ounce. But on Dec. 31, 1974, foreign sellers unloaded their gold on American buyers. The price of gold plummeted $45 in a week and fell to $103 by September 1976. Gold did not reach its 1974 high for four years. By 1980, long-term holders of gold were rewarded, but speculators were washed out by gold's first bear market decline of 1975-76.

Date	Gold Price	Comment
Monday, Dec. 30, 1974	$197.50	Last day gold ownership was forbidden to Americans
Tuesday, Dec. 31, 1974	$182.50	Down $15 on the first day of legalization
Jan. 1, 1975		Markets closed
Thursday, Jan. 2, 1975	$175.00	Down $22.50 in first two days of legalization
Friday, Jan. 3, 1975	$163.00	U.S. Treasury announced that it would sell gold
Monday, Jan. 6, 1975	$153.00	Down $44.50 (a 22% decline in one week)

Something like that could conceivably happen with bitcoins. Bitcoin owners could bid the price up until the CME contract is available, and then sell their bitcoins at an exorbitant price to first-time bitcoin speculators.

Right now, bitcoin proponents claim that bitcoins are better than gold due to a “mining” algorithm that limits the supply. Bitcoins are often used to make private, secure transactions over the internet. With gold and silver, people own and trade the physical metal, but the goal of a “universal currency” is the same.

The problem is that there are hundreds, maybe even 1,000, competing cryptocurrencies, such as Ether, Litecoin and Ripple. Those currencies are losing value even as bitcoin is soaring, but anyone can start a new and better cryptocurrency with almost no real money involved. As a result, the bitcoin bubble may pop over the next few months, and investors may return to the world's proven universal currency: gold.

IDS of Texas Accepting Clients as of Nov. 1

International Depository Services Group (IDS), a privately-owned subsidiary of Dillon Gage Metals, opens Texas' first precious metals depository, International Depository Services of Texas. Beginning Nov. 1, depository clients who wish to store precious metals bars, rounds and coins in the state of Texas can contact IDS Group and open an account. It offers custom reporting and 24/7 online access through IDS's proprietary VaultDirect™ platform.

Kennedy Assassination File Release a “Non-Event” ... So Far

As promised, thousands of new documents were released in October 2017 from the classified files concerning the investigation into the tragic assassination of United States President John F. Kennedy nearly 54 years ago. The Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), however, has decreed that many other files must remain classified.

The major revelations of this new batch of documents are not very “major” at all, but they fill in some blanks on Lee Harvey Oswald's trip to Mexico in September 1963, and a death threat to Oswald, called in on Nov. 23, the day after the assassination and the day before Oswald was slain by Jack Ruby. The caller purported to represent a “Kill Oswald” committee, but the emotions of that weekend had many people wanting to punish the man who killed the beloved president.

2017 also marks the centennial of the birth of President Kennedy in 1917. There was a surge in demand for Kennedy half dollars around the last anniversary of his (May 29), and there will likely be another surge in demand as researchers pore through these new files. ☺

The 1916-D Mercury dime is among the rarest regular-issue dimes struck since the 1800s. This issue has a relatively small mintage of just 264,000 pieces.

If United States President Donald J. Trump collected coins, he might start with the coins of his own year of birth: 1946.

And if Kim Jong-un, supreme leader of North Korea, became a collector of United States coins from his purported year of birth (an unlikely proposition), he would need to complete a set minted in 1984.

As more collectors compete to assemble top-grade PCGS Set Registry® collections or NGC Registry assemblages and pursue an ever-increasing pursue an ever-increasing array of certified coins with special slab labels and designations, more traditional methods of coin collecting sometimes fall by the wayside.

Yet, the more things change, the more they stay the same. The business of selling nostalgia is one of the hottest trends these days. And how much more nostalgic could one wax than collecting coins from his or her birth year?

In this ever-changing world, the art of assembling birth year sets has remarkably remained much the same as it ever was. A birth year coin set was one of the first collecting objectives I ever accomplished as a youth, and is a favorite gift I give to loved ones.

Most birth year sets contain one coin from each denomination that was minted during a particular year. In many cases, this means acquiring a single cent, nickel, dime, quarter, and half dollar from the given year. When applicable, a dollar coin may also be included. In most cases, these five or six coins are assembled into a presentation case, frame, or other display. Five- and six-coin Whitman “Snap Lock” plastic holders are commonly used as an attractive, affordable option for organizing birth year coin sets.

While the commemoration of one’s birthday is the overarching theme for a birth year set, similar collections can be made to mark virtually any occasion, including graduations, weddings, anniversaries, and other significant life events. Whatever the occasion, the aim of building year sets may seem relatively straightforward to many hobbyists. Yet, they can represent a surprisingly challenging—even enigmatic—collecting objective.

For example, hobbyists who were born from the 1910s through the early 1930s face some daunting challenges if they’re building birth year sets. Many of these individuals were born during years when the United States government omitted some denominations from the annual production lineup.

Consider the year 1922, when only Lincoln cents and Peace dollars were minted. Later, economic strife during the Great Depression meant hiatuses for the nickel, dime, quarter, half dollar, and dollar coins for at least one year during the period 1929-33.

Meanwhile, the years 1916 and 1921 saw the production of issues with particularly small mintages, and the vast majority of those coins were not saved in uncirculated condition. Remember, it was the era before government-issued uncirculated sets, which were first offered by the United States Mint in 1947.

Yet, imagine if a few collectors had put away complete date-and-mintmark sets of coins from 1916 or 1921. They would include such rarities as the 1916-D Mercury dime, 1916 Standing Liberty quarter, 1921-S Buffalo nickel, and 1921-S Walking Liberty half dollar. Year sets incorporating gem uncirculated coins from 1916 or 1921 could easily be worth tens of thousands of dollars each, especially if they include all the applicable date and mintmark combinations.

The 1921 Peace dollar is both a first-year issue and one-year-only type. 1921 Peace dollars were struck in high-relief format, while later regular-strikes were produced with lower relief.

The 1916 Standing Liberty quarter is a first-year issue for its series and one of the rarest 20th-century quarters. Only 52,000 were made and they are extremely hard to find, especially in the higher grades.

According to pricing data from COINage and PCGS CoinFacts, a set consisting of one example of each regular-issue, non-gold coin minted in 1916 has a Mint State-65 value of $76,075. What is the cumulative face value of those coins? A mere $2.93, and that's including all mintmark variations of the 1916 Lincoln cent, Buffalo nickel, Barber and Mercury dimes, Barber and Standing Liberty quarters, and Walking Liberty half dollar. Throw in the 1916-S Indian Head $5 and $10 gold coins, 1916-S $20 Saint-Gaudens double eagle, and 1916 McKinley Memorial $1 gold commemorative, plus the 1916 Lincoln cent and Buffalo nickel proofs, and the total skyrockets to a staggering $149,425. Give or take a few bucks, of course.

A 1921 birth year set is even more costly to assemble. A collection consisting of the various business-strike examples of each 1921 coin in Mint State-65, from Lincoln cent through Peace dollar, comes to an approximate value of $180,000. Add the 1921 satin and matte proof Peace dollars at approximately $70,000 each in Proof-65, and the grand total comes to roughly $320,000. Want a 1921 Saint-Gaudens double eagle—the only gold coin minted in 1921—in Mint State-65, too? That will cost an additional $600,000 or so. Since you're already closing in on $1 million to assemble this princely 1921 birth year set, you might as well spend another $6,500 or so to buy the 1921 commemorative half dollars. These include the Pilgrim Tercentenary half dollar, Missouri Centennial half dollars (both the plain and "2*4 in Field" varieties), and the two different 1921 Alabama Centennial halves, plain and "2X2 in Field".

If only your grandparents or great-grandparents had the foresight to save those coins fresh from the bank. Sure, it may be a fantasy, but one can dream.

Don't birth year sets suddenly sound much more exciting? I think so, anyway.

I have been faced with some financial dilemmas in collecting my birth year set. I was born in 1981, which was a remarkably eventful year in the area of U.S. coins.

Susan B. Anthony dollars, which the public refused to accept as circulating coins, were on their last leg in 1981 and were produced for numismatic purposes only. They resurfaced for one year, 1999, to fill dollar coin shortfalls for vending devices and mass transit machines.

"S" mintmarks on proof coins received their second retooling in three calendar years. The creation of a "Clear S" (Type II; the "Filled S" is Type I) mintmark late in 1981 meant there were two proof varieties that year, as was the case in 1979, when the "S" mintmark was similarly enhanced.

Meanwhile, Congress approved at least two significant changes to U.S. coinage. The first was a new, cheaper, zinc-based composition for the copper-alloy one-cent coin that was put into use in 1982. Also, late in 1981 came the authorization of the 1982 George Washington half dollar, which became the first official commemorative coin since 1954.

To complete my birth year collection, I could have made the project a simple affair and collected only one coin of each denomination, spending a total of maybe $5 to assemble the six-coin set. For the same price, I could buy a 1981-S Type II proof set and be done with the deed, and already have the coins in a handsome display case. Or I could turn a seemingly simple, inexpensive birth year set project into a much more complex collecting endeavor. Which path do you think I chose?

I pursued the road less travelled, spending over $400 and several months chasing down not just 1981-S Type I and Type II proof sets, but also several other pieces. These include the 1981 uncirculated set and 1981 Philadelphia Mint and Denver Mint souvenir sets, which were made in small numbers and issued for sale only at the respective mint gift shops. I also sought the deceptively hard-to-find, three-coin 1981 Susan B. Anthony dollar souvenir set, which includes uncirculated examples of the three business-strike coins from Philadelphia, Denver, and San Francisco in a single cellophane packet and lime-green outer envelope.

Perhaps my elaborate approach to building a birth year collection will inspire you with other ideas for taking your year set in eclectic directions: Perhaps a roll set of business-strike coins from the special year. Why not a birth year registry set? Maybe even a collection consisting of one coin—or each issue—from every nation in existence during the year of your birth? The possibilities for building a birth year set are endless.

“If I was going to do this for myself, I’d build a year set of world coins!” exclaims Michael Jacobs, president of Jake’s Marketplace in Lake Zurich, Illinois. “While it’s harder to find display options for this, the gift expands the experience in seeing what the world looked like in coins from the respective year,” he adds. “It also has an added bonus—the gift giver, and sometimes the person who receives the gift, might want to acquire additional coins issued from that year. A great way to add to the hunt of collecting and expand the interest base for coins in a unique way.”

Jacobs has sold conventional five- and six-coin U.S. birth year sets for decades through his popular mail order and online coin shop, Jake’s Marketplace, which was established in 1963. It’s where I bought a 1953 year set for my mom’s 41st birthday in 1994, back when the five-coin assemblage cost only $7.95 at Jake’s Marketplace. Jacobs says such cent-through-half dollar options are especially popular sellers because they are relatively affordable and make wonderful mementos. “Basically, coins are great gifts,” he says. “Collecting has no rules other than the ones you set in budget or creativity.”

Thinking outside the numismatic box is exactly what Jacobs has to do when filling orders for something like a 1922 birth year set, which generally includes only a 1922-D Lincoln cent and 1922-dated Peace dollar. “If the current year’s coins are available, we offer that as a way to connect the ‘then-and-now’ aspect of this type of a gift when coins were not issued [for a particular year].”

On the flip side are those for whom a birth year set might include dozens of coins. Such has been the case since the mid-1980s, when the U.S. modern commemorative coin program began and the American Eagle silver and gold bullion coin series kicked off. Birth year sets including coins made since 1999 have the added wrinkle of including a multitude of designs. Think about the Westward Journey nickels (2004-05), 50 States quarters (1999-2008), America the Beautiful quarters (2010-present), Presidential $1 coins (2007-2016), and other design changes.

“Nothing says you have to include every coin,” Jacobs remarks. “We still sell a lot of the basic five-coin holders featuring the cent through half dollar.” Still, he says, the modern coin programs have helped make birth year set collecting more exciting. “Since 1982 with the modern commemoratives and 1986 with the Silver Eagles, these coins have made exceptional birth year coins outright or are added to even the most basic sets. Again, the only problem you have is finding display options once you get past six standard U.S. coins.”

Jacob believes the inclusion of a suitable frame or display case is an important part of building a birth year set, especially when presenting it as a gift to someone else. “A year set of coins in a great holder that can be walled or displayed on an easel often is placed in a way someone will always see and be remembered,” he says.

“Coins have something most other forms of collectibles don’t have: a date. It creates a point of reference and the second memory of who gave them to you. Other than a picture, how many gifts can do that?” he asks. “And we’ve got that covered, too. Some of the [birth year set] holders we sell include space to mount a picture—a complete time capsule gift idea!”

For Harry Melvin of South Park Coins, birth year sets hold a special place in his heart. “I still have my birth year set for 1963 that my father purchased for me in 1970 at a coin show in Minnesota.” The Forney, Texas, dealer also regularly sells birth year sets. “We put them together for the 1930s, ’40s and ’50s,” he explains. “Circulated coins can be very affordable for most people. Even nice uncirculated examples can be had at a reasonable cost depending on the year being acquired.”

Melvin adds that year sets are great gifts not just for birthdays, but also other occasions. “We recently put together a year set for 1891 for a customer. It was a gift that commemorated a purchase of a house that was built in that year.”

For more recent years, many collectors simply buy a proof set or mint set representative of their special year. This is certainly a much cheaper option. Many of the older government-issued proof sets made since the 1960s often sell for less than $10 each in the secondary market.

Meanwhile, those building a 2017 birth year set for newborns or other recent occasions can buy the basic 2017 United States Mint proof set for $26.95, while a 2017 uncirculated set is $20.95. “Many collectors start collecting coins with proof and mint sets, then expand on a series of their interest,” Melvin says.

Should a new collector’s interest meander into the Mint’s other offerings, there are plenty to choose from. “The Mint puts out a multitude of coins and commemoratives each year,” remarks Melvin. “It’s almost overwhelming to obtain all examples.” His words ring true to anybody who has recently attempted building modern year sets consisting of the Mint’s latest offerings.

For example, one would have spent a whopping $18,714.30 buying the minimum number of products and sets from the United States Mint to acquire one example of each coin issued in 2015. While some collectors pursue each new coin for their modern year sets, most simply can’t afford—let alone fathom—spending nearly $20,000 on new coins from the Mint.

Florida coin dealer John A. Zieman, owner of Z-Man Coins, believes the challenge of building an extensive birth year captures the spirit of the hobby. “I worked on collecting [a set] for my daughter’s birthday year of 1995, and I got every coin from that year. I went after mintmarks, types, eagles, gold, even currency.”

A complete 1995 year set includes several pricey coins, including the rare 1995-W American Silver Eagle, which presently retails for around $4,000 in Proof-69. Yet those challenges excite Zieman. “Only going after a few coins gets boring fast,” he says of conventional five- or six-piece birth year sets. “Collecting is about a never-ending collection.”

As for the more conventional birth year sets, Zieman says few people are asking him for any. “Demand is very, very low. I have only a few customers per year asking for them.” However, he does find a significant number of people buying proof sets to celebrate birthdays, especially as gifts for recipients born since 1950. “I sell between 20 and 30 sets per year for this purpose,” he says.

As an alternative to buying proof sets, Zieman says that a single coin from one’s birth year is a meaningful gift. It’s also a practical solution for those born at times when only a couple different circulating denominations were produced, such as in the early 1930s. “For years when fewer denominations were made, I recommend early commemorative halves.”

Whether his customers buy a single coin or an entire set, Zieman says, “I always recommend buying the best quality they can afford.”

He believes birth year sets can serve as gateways to other collecting avenues, especially for those who don’t presently collect coins. “I tell people who are buying [coins] for their child or grandchild to let them know everything that’s out there: eagles, proof sets, commemoratives, mint sets. ... I always try and suggest branching into other areas of collecting.”

Zieman’s motivation in telling his customers to buy more coins comes from his interest in seeing the hobby survive another generation. “I feel the art of collecting is slowly dying in our country, and that it’s every collector’s obligation to not only preserve history, but also to encourage others to join in and help this hobby.”

The 1921-S Walking Liberty half dollar is extremely scarce in the higher grades and, with an MS-60 price tag of more than $15,000, would be one of the most expensive coins in an uncirculated 1921 birth year set.

Indian Peace Medals

In the 1770s, the British distributed Indian peace medals on the American frontier.

They Furthered the Cause of American Independence

by R.W. Julian

In 18th-century America, it became a standard practice to award special medals to Indian chiefs. This was done by the representatives of England, France and Spain in an effort to maintain control of their allies among the different tribes.

The infant United States, beset by enemies on all sides, attempted to win the loyalty of Indian tribes on the frontier, but many of them were obligated to the English, making the fight for independence all that more difficult. When peace was finally declared in 1783, the British chose to occupy considerable areas of the old Northwest, especially what is now Michigan's Upper Peninsula, despite treaty obligations.

Attempts to dislodge the British influence proved futile for some years, and it was not until after the War of 1812 that London ceased to exercise any control over the Indian tribes on American territory. In the meantime, the United States had adopted the European practice of awarding medals to friendly chiefs in an effort to maintain peace on the frontier.

It should not be assumed that the mere awarding of a special medal automatically brought an Indian tribe under the protective wing of the American government. This was usually accompanied by the presentation of trade goods and coined money; the latter was used to buy needed goods from frontier merchants. In most circumstances, a treaty was signed as soon as possible.

(The modern view that the U.S. government broke all the treaties is not correct; Indians created their share of problems, though on a smaller scale. The major difficulty was the inability of either side to control those who wanted to cause trouble or acted from motives of revenge or greed.)

During the presidency of George Washington, Indian peace medals were oval and hand-engraved.

The four-inch Jefferson medal would have been very difficult to strike at the Philadelphia Mint.

In 1850, President Millard Fillmore introduced a new reverse to the Indian peace medal.

As early as November 1785, the Confederation government passed out medals to Indians in connection with a treaty at Hopewell (South Carolina), but none are known to have survived. Toward the end of that decade, a pair of dies was engraved and a few medals struck under the direction of Albion Cox, but only one of these is now known: a copper trial strike in the collection of the American Numismatic Society.

With the formation of the new federal government in the spring of 1789, the authorities decided upon a different kind of medal than had been used in the past. With minor exceptions, it had been traditional to present a round solid silver medal.

The decision was made to have leading American silversmiths prepare oval silver medals that were hand-engraved with a suitable scene. In most cases, except for a few of the earliest pieces, it showed President George Washington shaking hands with an Indian chief.

By the mid-1790s, the idea of hand-engraved medals had begun to lose favor and the government contracted with an expatriate American artist living in England, John Trumbull, to design new medals for them. Three special designs were created for what are now called the "Seasons" medals, and several hundred pieces were struck, mostly in silver, by English private coiner Matthew Boulton at his Soho mint.

None of the Seasons medals arrived in this country until after George Washington left office in March 1797. They were distributed during the administration of his successor, John Adams, despite the reverse legend, which specifically named Washington as the president.

The dies for the Seasons medals were boxed up by Boulton and shipped to America in late 1799. Well, that's what was supposed to happen, but the ship carrying the dies, the Woodrup Sims, was captured by a French privateer and the contents were sold at auction at a nearby port in France. The dies, being of no real intrinsic value, were no doubt simply thrown away.

By 1801, the number of Seasons medals on hand at the War Department, which handled Indian affairs, had begun to run low and the government had to consider what to do next: strike its own medals or have more made in England. At length, the decision was taken to strike its own.

President Thomas Jefferson consulted with leading artists and historians, and it was determined that the portrait of the president ought to appear on the medals. Indians had been accustomed to seeing the English or Spanish kings on such medals, and the American government would thereby achieve more credibility by following this precedent.

The obverse has a portrait of Jefferson in left profile and a legend reading "TH. JEFFERSON PRESIDENT OF THE U.S. A.D. 1801". The reverse has clasped hands below a crossed peace pipe and tomahawk. The inscription reads "PEACE AND FRIENDSHIP". This was to remain the basic design—with changes in the president's name—until 1850.

Although the contract to execute the dies was made with Robert Scot, chief engraver of the United States Mint at Philadelphia, it is believed that John Reich did most of the work on the Jefferson medal dies; he had emigrated from Germany not long before. Three sizes of dies were made: two, three and four inches.

It is possible that Scot was given the contract, officially, because Reich was not a citizen. In addition, someone might have thought it odd that the chief engraver was not involved in a project of this kind.

The different sizes were intended to distinguish the relative importance of the chiefs to whom the medals were given. The leader of a large and powerful tribe might get a four-inch medal, while a lesser sub-chief got a smaller one. Each of the Jefferson medals had a ring attached to the top so that the recipient could wear it around his neck on a rawhide strap.

The dies were ready by the later part of 1801, but a difficulty soon arose. No one had considered that the large sizes would be very difficult to strike at the Philadelphia Mint, which did not have the kind of presses available at the main European mints. The four-inch size had never even been passed out by British, French or Spanish agents.

It was technically possible for the presses at the Philadelphia Mint to strike medals of four inches in diameter, but the problem was the number of blows from the dies needed to bring up the design. It has been estimated that it would have taken about 75 blows from the dies for each silver medal, and the large number of medals wanted would have tied the mint machinery up for weeks at a time.

At length, the decision was taken to produce hollow medals. This was done by striking each side separately on a thin silver blank and then soldering the two sides together. The British had done this on occasion in the 1760s and 1770s, so there was a precedent for such an action.

One such medal found in the Pacific Northwest, and no doubt presented by the

In 1857, a scalping scene was added to the reverse of the Indian peace medals struck for President James Buchanan.

The President Ulysses S. Grant medal of 1871 bore his portrait, but not his name.

Lewis and Clark Expedition, contained a wooden core, perhaps to make it heavier. Whether this was done officially or not is unknown.

Records of how many Jefferson medals were made are not available. Ironically, it was the British, whose medals were being copied, who have prevented us from learning more about these medals: They burned the Treasury Building at Washington during the War of 1812, and the original invoices and records for the medals went up in flames. Only isolated references now exist in the archives.

The first important use of the new Jefferson medals was on the famous Lewis and Clark expedition of 1804-06. Large numbers of Jefferson medals were given out to chiefs along the way, in tandem with a smaller number of Seasons medals. The latter were thought of as the least important class of medals.

Jefferson left office in early March 1809, but it was not until 1814 that the War Department got around to creating fresh dies for his successor, James Madison. The design was quite similar, with the usual crossed hands on the reverse and the presidential portrait on the obverse, but this time the largest size was three inches and all were struck in solid form.

The reason for the change is not difficult to discover. The Indians almost certainly complained about the low weight of the hollow medals and the fact that they compared badly with the current English medals of solid silver. The diameters were now three, two-and-a-half, and two inches.

All of the Madison medals were struck in the fall of 1814, from dies engraved by John Reich, without the subterfuge of going through Robert Scot. Reich had joined the Mint engraving department in 1807 at the express request of Mint Director Robert Patterson, and was to remain there until 1817, when failing eyesight forced his resignation.

Instead of the attached ring found at the top of the Jefferson medals, those for Madison had a small hole drilled near the top of the obverse. Not only did this make the medals less expensive to make (except, of course, in terms of the silver), but it eliminated the ring, which would break off. A silver wire was inserted through the hole, and the recipient threaded a rawhide chain through the wire.

For the next several presidents, beginning with Monroe in 1817, the Indian peace medals followed the pattern set by James Madison. There was no medal for William Henry Harrison, who died after only one month in office at the beginning of 1841. (Mint Director Robert Patterson had tentatively hired Robert Ball Hughes for this task, but the project was cancelled when Harrison died.)

With the death of President Zachary Taylor in 1850, Millard Fillmore became president, and his medals were of an entirely new style. The obverse is similar to those of the past, but the reverse has an Indian and a settler standing before the American flag, with a plowed field and orchard in the background. The reverse design was meant to symbolize the benefits of civilization.

For President James Buchanan in 1857 there was yet another new reverse design. This time there was a central scene showing an Indian plowing, along with happy children near a frame house. Arched over the top were the figures of two Indians, one scalping the other. No doubt this was meant to make a contrast, but one thinks it would have been better to leave scalping scenes off medals presented to Indians.

The medals made for Abraham Lincoln used the Buchanan reverse design of 1857 but, as had been the case since 1851, there were now only two sizes presented to Indian chiefs, the smallest size (two inches) having been dropped from the series.

Andrew Johnson's reverse design of 1865 showed an Indian chief and Columbia (America) shaking hands in front of a bust of George Washington. There are implements of war and peace in the background. There is no lettering on the reverse except for the word "PEACE" on the pedestal holding the bust of Washington. It is one of the better designs and is clearly well thought out.

Ulysses S. Grant, in office from 1869 through 1877, has the dubious honor of having the most cluttered Indian peace medal. Apparently designed by a committee of no particular talent, both sides of the medal are filled with legends and vignettes. In fact, just about everything is found on one side or the other except Grant's name. His portrait appears, however.

Indian peace medals continued to be struck until the presidency of Benjamin Harrison in 1890, but they became more or less irrelevant after 1870. The government no longer needed the goodwill of the chiefs, and the giving of medals had by now degenerated into a popularity contest, in which the local Indian agent decided who got the medals. Sometimes chiefs did, and sometimes they didn't. They were even awarded in athletic contests between tribes.

Beginning in 1861, the Philadelphia Mint began to strike copper-bronzed copies of Indian peace medals for collectors; these are still available (in real bronze) at the mints, except that only the three-inch size is now made. The Seasons medals have never been restruck, while the medal for John Adams (1797) is based on an obverse die made in the 1820s.

After 1860, all peace medals—beginning with Abraham Lincoln's—whether silver or copper-bronzed, were struck at the Philadelphia Mint. For these later chief executives, only the regular presidential medal can be obtained from the United States Mint.

From the late 1850s to the 1880s, there was strong collector interest in early medals of the Philadelphia Mint, but this demand fell off by 1900. It was not until the 1970s that prices for certain rare medals of the 19th century once more approached those of the Civil War era, over 100 years earlier.

One of the finest collections of Indian peace medals, both in the original silver and later copper-bronzed restrikes, was formed by the late David W. Dreyfuss. The sale of his collection by Bowers & Merena in April 1986 was a landmark sale in this respect.

Although prices have, in some instances, been superseded for individual pieces, the Dreyfuss sale is still consulted for its prices on many of the Indian peace medals. An original medium-size Jefferson medal brought $8,800. An original three-inch Madison brought more than $9,300, while the same size for Andrew Jackson, struck in 1837, fetched $6,600.

A Grant silver medal brought less than $1,400, which does not seem all that much until it is realized that Grant silver medals were restruck for collectors for several decades. The other medals were not, as a general rule, restruck for collectors in silver.

There are, at present, no general guides to the values of Indian peace medals. The serious collector of such pieces is advised to study current auction results to determine present-day values.

Most collectors are content, because of the high prices involved for the original silver strikes, to collect copper-bronzed (19th century) or real bronze (20th century) Indian peace medals. Generally speaking, the mahogany-finish copper medals of the 19th century are preferred by most collectors. ○

A Uniquely American Coin

If there is one coin that is so uniquely American that it cannot be mistaken for the coin of any other country, it is the Buffalo, or Indian Head, nickel (1913 through 1938).

They were still found in pocket change when I was growing up in the Nifty Fifties, and fit right in with the popular Western themed TV shows of the day. A nickel back then bought a candy bar or a Coke, so these coins got plenty of use, especially in vending machines.

Designed by James Earle Fraser (1876-1953), the Indian Head nickel ended its authorized 25-year run when the Jefferson nickel was released into circulation later in 1938.

The origins of the Indian Head nickel started with President Theodore “Teddy” Roosevelt, who is credited with the effort to bring more artistry to the nation’s coin designs. Roosevelt recruited American sculptor Augustus Saint-Gaudens, who led the renaissance of American coinage and designed the $20 double eagle gold piece (1907 through 1933), which has long been considered one of the most beautiful of American coins.

Fraser was not only an assistant to Saint-Gaudens, he was the master sculptor’s protégé. Their association began while Fraser was studying abroad at the Académie des Beaux-Arts in Paris.

Fraser, who grew up in the Dakota Territory and lived among Native Americans as a boy, did not limit his talents to the medallic arts. Among his masterpieces is the iconic “End of the Trail” sculpture, a tribute to the plight of the Plains Indians.

What was his inspiration for the nickel? In

Buffalo Nickel Trivia

- The words “In God We Trust” are not on the coin.
- Buffalo nickels were the favored “canvas” of the rail-riding artists of the Great Depression, whose designs are known as “hobo nickels” (Numismatic Nostalgia, November 2016).
- According to the Inflation Calculator, the buying power of five cents in 1913 was equal to that of $1.24 in 2017.
- James Earle Fraser was born in 1876, the same year of Custer’s Last Stand at the Battle of Little Bighorn.

Fraser's obverse portrait was a composite of several Indians, including Lakota Sioux chief Iron Tail.

James Earle Fraser in his studio with a clay maquette of the "End of the Trail" sculpture, ca. 1910.

Roger W. Burdette's 2007 work Renaissance of American Coinage 1909-1915, Fraser is quoted as saying in a 1947 radio interview, "Well, when I was asked to do a nickel, I felt I wanted to do something totally American—a coin that could not be mistaken for any other country's coin. It occurred to me that the buffalo, as part of our western background, was 100% American, and that our North American Indian fitted into the picture perfectly."

But just who would be the model for the new coin? Fraser himself said the image was a composite of several Indians, not one specific person. In a letter to Mint Director George Roberts, he said, "I had done several portraits of Indians, among them Iron Tail, Two Moons, and one or two others, and probably got characteristics from those men in the head on the coins, but my purpose was not to make a portrait but a type."

So one would have expected that Fraser would use a similar composite for the buffalo on the coin's reverse. Not so. Fraser had one particular buffalo in mind, and a rather famous one at that. His design was based on Black Diamond, a North American bison at the Central Park Zoo. Fraser said he spent hours trying to get just the right angle, but the animal showed his face and refused to budge to allow Fraser get a side view. Out of frustration, he called Black Diamond one of the most stubborn and contrary animals he ever met!

Now, Black Diamond had four legs, naturally. And so did the buffalo on the reverse of hundreds of millions of examples of this coin. But an error at the Denver mint created one of the most iconic and sought after coins of the 20th century: a three-legged variety. It seems a mint employee was trying to remove "clash" marks from a reverse die. These were introduced when the die inadvertently clashed together with the obverse die after a planchet was misfed into the press. But in polishing those marks off, he also removed one of the animal's legs by mistake!

It's unknown how many of the three-legged 1937-D varieties—out of the 17,826,000 Denver nickels minted that year—were released before the error was discovered.

But the error coin commands a premium: $545 in average condition to over $2,500 in MS-60 (USA Coin Book, www.USACoinBook.com). Assembling a complete set of Buffalo nickels is no easy task, especially since a 1916 Double Die coin (obverse) fetches several thousand dollars in good condition (G4).

Another oddity of the 1913 Buffalo nickel is that the bison is standing on a raised mound (Type 1). The mound was replaced in a new version that was released into circulation later in 1913 (Type 2) to better protect the words FIVE CENTS, situated below it, from early wear. The date on the obverse of the coin was also subject to early wear.

Buffalo nickels are rarely found in circulation anymore. Consider collecting just one coin from each year. Or perhaps collect the coins from a special year, like the year your grandfather or great-grandfather was born. In either case, they add a real piece of Americana to anyone's collection! ☺

Hard Times Tokens

Many Hard Times tokens attacked Andrew Jackson, such as this one criticizing his expanded military and financial power.

Private Producers Mint Coins to Fill a Gap

by David Schwager

If all the coins in circulation went away, would you make your own? More than once in American history, people took minting into their own hands. Hard Times tokens remain to tell the story of one of those episodes. Some historians say that the Hard Times, an economic downturn of 1837-44, was as severe as the Great Depression of the 1930s—although, with economic statistics unavailable for the earlier period, we will never know for sure.

HERITAGE AUCTIONS

When Dr. Louis Feuchtwanger could not interest the Mint in his nickel alloy, he had millions of one-cent tokens privately made.

A maker of advertising medals and tokens since 1829, Scovill issued its own store card in 1837.

Earlier in the 1830s, the United States was prosperous, with wealth created by easy credit and speculation in newly settled frontier land. The Bank of the United States—a federally chartered, but privately owned institution—handled government funds, and its paper money was widely accepted at face value.

President Andrew Jackson, who served from 1829 to 1837, was a polarizing figure with ardent followers and fervent opponents. He favored hard money, preferring coin over paper, and felt that the Bank of the United States enriched its owners at the expense of average people and the taxpayers. In 1836, Jackson issued the Specie Circular, an order that federal lands would be sold only for gold or silver instead of banknotes or credit. At the same time, Jackson's supporters allowed the charter of the Bank of the United States to expire. The bank closed peacefully and paid its depositors, but this further tightened credit.

These two changes lessened the money supply, causing business activity to dry up. The nation entered the period that became known as the Hard Times in 1837, as Jackson's successor, former vice president Martin Van Buren, took office. Concerned people hoarded precious metal. Gold, then silver coins disappeared from circulation. Soon, even copper cents could not be found in the market.

With official coinage gone, private businesses stepped in to fill the void. Several companies with experience making medals, buttons, or other small metal objects began issuing copper tokens about the same size as the missing large cents. Storekeepers and other business owners bought these tokens in bulk at less than one cent each and then gave them to their customers in change at the value of one cent. Token makers earned profits for their work, merchants profited from the difference between purchase price and face value, and the general public profited by having coins for conducting their daily business. The results of this spontaneous market-based solution became known to collectors as "Hard Times tokens".

The great majority of Hard Times tokens show extensive wear, indicating that they served their intended purpose and circulated as money. Without the government or another agency to take worn tokens out of circulation, they continued to serve as cent substitutes for years afterwards, until the United States ended large cent production in 1857.

The end of the large cent marked the beginning of widespread coin collecting in the United States, and tokens, such as Hard Times tokens, were some of the most avidly collected pieces in the early days of American numismatics. Today, they attract the attention of many collectors who otherwise focus on federal coinage, and often appear in general references on U.S. coins.

Because Hard Times tokens were substitutes for those official coins, many resemble federal one-cent pieces. The makers used Liberty head, wreath and eagle motifs, changing them just enough to avoid accusations of counterfeiting. The reverses might have "NOT ONE CENT" or other wording close to the legends on official coins.

As an example, the series includes a half cent token dated 1837, with an eagle similar to the one on silver Capped Bust coins on one side, a wreath similar to the one on half cents of the period on the other side, and the words "HALF CENT OF PURE COPPER". Not only were these images similar enough to allow the tokens to circulate, but some coin collecting albums include a space for this token, as the mint made no 1837 half cents.

Sometimes, the changes were not enough, as in the case of prolific token producer William Scovill, of Scovill Manufacturing, who was indicted for counterfeiting in 1838. He was never brought to trial, and the legal action may have been prompted less by the company's bogus pennies and more by their satirical and political tokens. These tokens were overtly political, usually attacking Van Buren or Jackson.

Although the Hard Times began in 1837, collectors and researchers often group in tokens from as early as 1832, when similar pro-Jackson and anti-Jackson pieces began appearing. One undated token shows Jackson emerging from a treasure chest holding a sword and a moneybag. The designer intended to show that it was dangerous for one person to hold both military and financial power. The donkey on the reverse, a common theme in anti-Jackson cartoons, further criticized the former president as stubborn and unrefined. (Jackson's supporters eventually took the donkey label as their own, which is why the Democratic Party that Jackson founded still uses the donkey as its symbol today.)

These tokens, similar in design, size, and composition to U.S. cents, led to an indictment for counterfeiting.

Tokens like this one attacking President Martin Van Buren probably contributed to the legal troubles of their maker, Scovill Manufacturing.

Another often-seen token depicts a wrecked ship with the legend "VAN BUREN METALLIC CURRENCY 1837" on one side, and a safely sailing ship and the words "WEBSTER CREDIT CURRENCY 1841" the other. ("Currency" sometimes appears as "current", which had the same meaning at the time.) Supporters of the unsuccessful Whig Party candidate Daniel Webster, who lost the 1836 presidential election to Van Buren, made this token.

"Times are tough with tight credit under Van Buren today in 1837," they intended to say, "but when our man Webster is inaugurated in four years, we will have smooth sailing." Webster decided not to run again, but the issuers were right in that the Hard Times ended in the next administration, under John Tyler.

One of the most popular political tokens shows a kneeling slave with the legend "AM I NOT A WOMAN AND A SISTER 1838". The general design comes from half penny tokens issued in Britain in the 1780s and '90s opposing slavery in the British Caribbean colonies. Slavery and anti-slavery items of all types are highly collectible, and although not hard to find, this piece brings higher prices than other Hard Times tokens. A seldom-seen variety with a male slave and "AM I NOT A MAN AND A BROTHER" is one of the rarities of the Hard Times series, with three examples known.

The next class of tokens, which also includes rare types, had no connection to weighty social questions, but sought only to promote businesses. Known as store cards, each token bears an advertisement, allowing their issuers to give small change to current customers, while attracting new patrons. About 140 businesses advertised on store cards, including restaurants, clothing stores, manufacturers, and even token makers such as Scovill, mentioned earlier.

One of the most intriguing store cards came from a New York City pharmacist named Dr. Louis Feuchtwanger. He spent much of 1837 attempting to interest the United States Mint in using his nickel-copper-tin alloy (called Feuchtwanger's Composition or American Silver) for one-cent coins. When this plan proved unsuccessful, he had probably millions of what later became known as Feuchtwanger Cents struck at his own expense and distributed into commerce. Although some store cards appear for sale frequently, others are quite rare and Hard Times specialists put much of their effort and money into finding tokens from scarce merchants.

Before becoming a specialist, a collector needs to make a first purchase and explore a series. Hard Times tokens are easy to start collecting. Plenty of pieces exist with honest wear and no problems, and can be obtained at modest prices. A typical token grading Very Fine might sell for $15 to $30. One of the ship tokens described earlier makes a great first buy, and there are plenty of other options. Collectors like coins with stories, and most of the political tokens and imitation cents remain affordable while telling the story of the Hard Times.

A collector looking to spend a little more for a better piece as an initial purchase or seeking to upgrade their collection might consider one of the same political tokens certified in a lower mint state grade, such as MS-62 or MS-63. The most common varieties bring around $250. This compares favorably to the $750 or so a collector would have to pay for a much more common large cent of the same period in the same grade. A mint state political token is a good choice for the collector who wants only one piece to represent the entire Hard Times series. It's an attractive token for a reasonable investment.

The collector wanting the scarcer pieces, less suitable for a first buy, will find that they often do not exist in mint state. There are too many rare merchants to list, but as an illustration, all 11 New Orleans issuers are hard to find, and most types have no uncirculated examples. Some of the least common merchants have only a few—sometimes only one—known pieces, and values can go into the high five-digit range. Rarer pieces will take more work and research to locate, and buyers should wait a year or longer after starting their collection.

After those first few purchases, you will have an idea of how you feel about Hard Times tokens and whether you want to con-

German Third Reich Coinage

For twelve long years (1933-1945), Germany and its people endured the dictatorship of Adolf Hitler and the deplorable acts of "his" Third Reich. History documents the horrors and this ten-coin set of the "Reich", all adorned with his infamous swastika, serve as a continuing reminder of a very dark period in human history. Prussian Silver Coins of Kaiser Wilhelm II

Wilhelm II was born in Berlin in 1859. He became the 9th King of Prussia and the 3rd Emperor of Germany in 1888. Wilhelm II was a strong opponent of socialism and a passionate supporter of German militarism and imperialism. Despite the fact that he was Queen Victoria's grandson, Wilhelm II pursued an anti-British foreign policy, which was shown by his support to South Africa during the Boar War. Wilhelm II ruled until 1918. He was forced to abdicate after Germany's loss in World War I. The anti-slavery motif makes this one of the most popular political Hard Times tokens.

This half-cent token assures users that it has "U.S. Standard Weight & Value."

Issued by a New Orleans merchant, this is one of many scarce store cards in the Hard Times series.

tinue. At this point, consider making a collecting plan. With so many scarce varieties, buying one of each is not practical. In fact, it has never been done. Instead, decide on a satisfying approach that works well for you. A type set collector might want one imitation cent, one political token, and one store card, or one of each category—however you choose to define those categories.

One of the most common approaches is to buy as many different types as is practical, continually working toward expanding and improving the set instead of completing it. Some collectors find that one nice coin (or one extraordinary coin) is enough to represent Hard Times tokens in their holdings.

Where should collectors make those purchases? Hard Times tokens are not federal coins but, as money issued in the United States, they are just outside the main body of U.S. numismatics. They hold a position similar to that of colonial coins or Civil War tokens. Unless they deal strictly in U.S. mint products, most mail order dealers or local coin shops will have a few. Consider starting with the same dealer you regularly patronize when buying your first few tokens.

When moving to uncirculated tokens or any but the most common store cards, the task quickly becomes more difficult; pieces are not necessarily expensive, but they are harder to find. A coin show becomes a better option, or consider contacting some of the larger mail order dealers about these. An advanced collector looking for scarce varieties or seldom-seen types will probably need to wait for the pieces to appear in major auctions.

When studying Hard Times tokens, or tokens and medals of almost any type, you will notice that some of the information we take for granted in collecting United States Mint coins simply does not exist. The Mint kept careful records on how many coins of each type were made each year and where they were made, leaving only a few gaps to puzzle the researcher. With tokens, however, no mintage figures exist.

The forward-looking nature of successful businesses means that records are seldom held onto longer than a few years. We do not even know for sure who made most Hard Times tokens. Researchers have done extensive work tracing letters and design elements from one token to another to figure out the probable producer of many tokens, but few primary sources exist. This is another of the fascinating aspects and opportunities of numismatics: that so much research remains to be done and that dedicated amateurs add to the body of knowledge every year.

To gain that knowledge, we follow the advice to "buy the books before buying the coins". If you plan to buy only a few low-cost tokens, you can get by with the three pages on the subject in A Guide Book of United States Coins, which most of us already own. This illustrates several types and gives a basic price guide.

If you plan to explore the field in any depth, as a researcher or collector, the best reference is A Guide Book of Hard Times Tokens, by Q. David Bowers (2015). This book includes high-quality color photographs of every type, something seen in no other reference on the subject. A collector who continues with the series should also add Russell Rulau's Standard Catalog of Hard Times Tokens, 9th Edition (2002). Although not as organized as the Bowers work, it gives additional information on die varieties and manufacturers. Lastly, if you want to see illustrations of and research on scarce tokens, go to the Stack's Bowers Galleries website and download the free catalog from the landmark 2008 sale of the James E. Dice and M. Lamar Hicks collection.

While reading about Hard Times tokens or browsing auction listings, you will see "Low" numbers and "HT" numbers. Lyman Low wrote the first book about Hard Times tokens in 1899 and numbered the types roughly in the order in which he discovered them. In the 1980s, Russell Rulau combined Low's work with the many new types found in the 20th century and renumbered the series with HT (Hard Times) numbers. Sales listings often mention both numbers. For example, the most common variety of the Jackson/treasure chest token described earlier appears as "Low-51, HT-70".

"Common", of course, means common in the context of the series. Few people put aside these tokens when they were new, and the pieces are only common in relation to the demand for this material at the edge of the numismatic mainstream. Rare does mean rare, however, and one of the attractions of Hard Times tokens or other fields outside of federal coinage is that scarce tokens sell for a fraction of what a United States Mint coin of the same rarity would bring. A mid-budget collector with the right education and patience can put together a fine collection. ☺

by John Iddings

Human Rights Are a Hot Topic Around the World

An ornery U.S. president destroyed one of the world's more powerful banks. An assassin ended the life of Kaspar Hauser, central character of one of Europe's most enduring legends. Human rights had become a topic of heated debate in America and throughout the Western world.

The year was 1833, and the U.S. Mint was producing a substantial number of silver coins. The Mint also unwittingly produced its first coin for a foreign country, and it created a great numismatic rarity: the 1833 proof half eagle ($5 gold piece).

DONATING RARE COINS to museums and libraries may be a noble thing to do, but it precludes actual coin collectors from ever owning them.

The American Colonization Society's 1833 one-cent token was used as currency in Liberia, the colony of freed slaves established by the society on the west coast of Africa.

The 1833 proof Capped Head Liberty Head half eagle is considered one of the great rarities of American numismatic for two reasons:

1. There are only two examples known.
2. Only one of them can be owned by a private collector. The other one is in the National Numismatic Collection at the Smithsonian Institution.

The privately owned 1833 proof half eagle is known as the Pittman specimen, since it once was owned by the great collector John Jay Pittman. The Professional Coin Grading Service (PCGS) has graded it Proof-67, and it is described as deeply mirrored, well-struck, fully original, and richly toned.

Pittman was a chemist at Eastman Kodak Co. in Rochester, New York. He was an avid coin collector with a knack for obtaining underpriced rarities.

Pittman bought the 1833 proof half eagle for about $630 when it was sold by the Egyptian government; after King Farouk was ousted, his massive coin collection was disposed of in 1954. (By way of price comparison, the 1954 Ford Thunderbird had a base sticker price of $2,695.)

In 1997, the Pittman-Farouk coin sold at auction for $467,500 (compared with $40,000 for a 2005 Thunderbird.)

David W. Akers, a U.S. gold expert who brought the Pittman coins to auction, declared the 1833 proof half eagle "the premier coin in the entire Pittman Collection," adding, "It is certainly my personal favorite in the collection and, in fact, I consider it to be one of the greatest coins that I have ever seen."

The coin was offered at auction again in January 2005, and sold for $977,500.

The Slavery Abolition Act of 1833 ordered an end to slavery in all British colonies by 1834.

But when it was offered in May 2016 in Part IV of the D. Brent Pogue Collection, Stack's Bowers Galleries hammered it down at auction for a record $1,351,250.

PRESIDENT ANDREW Jackson was extremely popular in 1833 as a champion of the common man.

Jackson's pet peeve was the Second Bank of the United States. Although this was a privately owned bank, it had a government charter to regulate the flow of currency, control credit, and perform banking services for the U.S. Treasury.

Jackson didn't like the fact that the bank exerted enormous influence on national affairs, but was run like a private club by a board of 25 directors. He blamed financiers and speculators for the boom-and-bust economic cycles of the era.

In short, Jackson wanted to destroy the Second Bank of the United States.

In 1832, Congress approved an early renewal of the bank's charter, which Jackson vetoed. When Jackson was easily reelected later in the year, he considered it an endorsement of his policy toward the bank.

On Oct. 1, 1833, Jackson announced that federal funds would no longer be deposited in the Second Bank of the United States.

By the time the final charter renewal deadline arrived in 1836, the bank had evaporated.

IF YOU HAVE A large coin-buying budget and are disappointed that you can't buy the 1833 proof half eagle because it's simply not available—well, take heart.

The business strike of the 1833 half eagle is also a rare coin. The original mintage was a generous 193,620, but the weight of the U.S. half eagle was reduced the following year, and the vast majority of the 1833 half eagles were returned to the Mint and melted at that time. Therefore, the surviving population today is estimated to be just 75 coins.

The 1833 half eagles include large-date and small-date varieties, and the small date is considered the rarer of the two.

An 1833 small date half eagle graded Mint State-63 by PCGS was sold for $111,625 at a Heritage auction in January 2017.

For those on a tighter budget, an 1833 half eagle in very fine condition would sell for about $25,000.

THE NEWPORT MERCURY newspaper in Rhode Island revealed in 1833 that:

- Singing lessons were being offered at the rate of 12 lessons for $2.25.
- The state of Connecticut conducted a weekly lottery with prizes of $10,000 for $4 tickets and $5,000 for $2 tickets.
- A piece of fine lace measuring 3 feet by 9 feet sold for $1.50.
- Raw wool sold for 50 cents a pound.
- Steamboat fare from Providence, Rhode

- Island, to New York was $5.
- The murder rate in New Orleans was nearly one homicide per day.
- The Newfoundland fishing industry lost an estimated 300 men and 35 ships due to accidents during the spring of 1833.
- A cholera epidemic in Lexington, Kentucky, claimed the lives of 272 whites, 184 slaves, and 43 free blacks in just two months.
- For 50 cents, well-heeled ladies of Newport could attend a lecture on the topic of "Love and Marriage".

U.S. MINT OFFICIALS had been trying to phase out the half cent during the early 1800s, but in 1831, the Mint received an order for 400,000 half cents from merchant Washington Cilley, so it tooled up to create the Classic Head half cents of 1831 through 1836.

The 1833 half cents had an estimated mintage of about 141,000.

During the Great Depression, a century later, the Gutttag Bros. coin company in New York located a hoard of 1833 half cents numbering in the thousands. Most of the coins were described as being mint red, but spotted. They were sold initially for 25 cents each, but by the mid-1950s, the price had jumped to $2 or $3 each.

Today's collectors can obtain the 1833 Classic Head half cent for about $80 in fine, $100 in extremely fine and $350 in MS-60 Red-Brown.

The large cent was a popular coin of the era, and the mintage of 1833 cents was a generous 2.7 million.

The 1833 cents were made from six obverse and five reverse dies, resulting in six different varieties. Most modern price guides don't distinguish among the varieties, which have very subtle differences in appearance.

Typical prices for the 1833 Coronet large cent are $40 in good, $150 in very fine, $360 in About Uncirculated-55, and $3,000 in MS-63RB.

Collectors who want to identify specific varieties should check out a copy of The Cent Book, 1816-1839, by John D. Wright.

THE FIRST COIN FOR the whole of India was produced by the East Indian Co. in 1833.

Portugal's Maria II was restored to the throne by her father, Dom Pedro, who ordered that gold coins be struck with the 14-year-old's image on the obverse.

The copper coin was a proof prototype in the denomination of one-quarter anna. Large-scale EIC coinage for India would begin in 1835.

Prior to that time, regional coinages had been produced throughout India by various princes, and some of these coinages continued through the mid-20th century.

KASPAR HAUSER WAS assassinated in 1833, ending one of the strangest tales in European history.

On May 26, 1828, a disoriented teenager was discovered wandering the streets of Nuremberg, Germany. He was wearing ragged clothing and could barely talk.

He was taken to a police station, where he would only write a name: Kaspar Hauser.

The boy was placed in the care of a jailer and seemed a hopeless case. He walked like a toddler, could barely use his fingers and could digest only water and bread.

People became fascinated by the teenager and eventually the boy was able to tell his story. He said that for most of his life, he had been chained to the floor of a small cell in total isolation. He was mysteriously set free and the next thing he remembered, he was in Nuremberg.

Soon, the story spread that Hauser was connected to the family of the grand duke of Baden.

The Bavarian court of appeals began to investigate the case. Hauser was placed in the care of a schoolteacher and began to flourish.

On Oct. 17, 1829, a hooded man tried to kill Hauser with an ax, wounding him on the forehead. The assassination attempt fueled rumors about Hauser's connection to the House of Baden.

On Dec. 14, 1833, Hauser was lured to a park, where he was fatally stabbed. The assassin was never identified.

The young man was buried in a country graveyard, where his headstone reads: "Here lies Kaspar Hauser, riddle of his time. His birth was unknown, his death mysterious."

Attempts to unravel the riddle continued into modern times.

A 1996 DNA analyses of blood taken from Hauser's clothing failed to show a link to the ducal family.

In 2002, however, Munster University's Institute for Forensic Medicine analyzed hair and body cells that allegedly belonged to Kaspar Hauser. The genetic code was a 95% match to that of Astrid von Medinger, a descendant of the Grand Duchess.

In other words, there is some scientific support for the idea that the mysterious Kaspar Hauser was the prince of Baden.

THE U.S. SILVER COINS of 1833 all feature the Capped Bust Liberty Head design originally created by John Reich and later reworked by Mint Chief Engraver William Kneass.

All are common-date coins. They aren't cheap, but they are reasonably priced for coins from the era.

The 1833 Capped Bust half dime had a mintage of more than 1.3 million and is priced at $100 in fine, $200 in extremely fine, $500 in MS-60 and $1,000 in MS-63.

One variation of the 1833 half dime features extra spaces between the numerals in the date. Another variety has an extra-heavy rim on the obverse.

The 1833 Capped Bust dime had a mintage of 485,000 and sells today for $125 in fine, $300 in XF, $1,000 in MS-60 and more than $2,000 in MS-63.

Most 1833 dimes feature a "high 1" in the date. Dimes with evenly aligned numerals in the date are considered scarce.

THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT ordered an end to slavery in all British colonies by Aug. 1, 1834.

The bill passed on Aug. 23, 1833, after a long campaign by humanitarian William Wilberforce, who died a month before its passage.

The new law ordered that children under 6 be freed immediately. Slaves 6 and older were to be given a period of apprenticeship that would end in 1837. Slave owners would be compensated a total of 120 million pounds.

Human rights also were gaining ground in Russia, where Czar Nicholas banned the public sale of serfs in 1833.

Meanwhile, slavery was a matter of heated debate in the United States in 1833.

"An Appeal in Favor of That Class of Americans Called Africans" was published by Boston abolitionist David Lee Child and his wife, Lydia. They proposed that blacks be educated.

The same year, Connecticut schoolteacher Prudence Crandall was imprisoned for admitting black girls to her school, a violation of state law.

There are two known specimens of the 1833 proof Capped Head Liberty Head half eagle. One is privately owned, the other is in the Smithsonian collection.

The American Anti-Slavery Society was founded in Philadelphia by abolitionists, including James Mott. That group banned women from membership, so Mott's wife, Lucretia, formed a separate abolitionist group for women.

Slavery was an underlying bone of contention when Sen. Henry Clay of South Carolina submitted the Compromise Tariff Act, which temporarily cooled off the threat of open conflict between the industrial North and the cotton-exporting South.

THE CAPPED BUST quarter dollar of 1833 had a mintage of 156,000 and features two varieties. One has a period after the denomination ("25 C.") on the reverse, while the other lacks a period ("25 C").

Most price guides don't differentiate between the two varieties.

Typical prices for an 1833 quarter today are $100 in fine, $400 in XF, $2,500 in MS-60, and nearly $5,000 in MS-63.

The half dollar was a popular coin in 1833, as evidenced by its relatively large mintage of more than 5.2 million. For today's collectors, the prices of the 1833 half dollar are $100 in fine, $250 in XF, $1,500 in MS-60, and over $2,000 in MS-63.

One half-dollar variety to look for features an extra-large "50 C" denomination on the reverse. Also, the "5" has a long, curved top.

THE AMERICAN Colonization Society had been around since 1817 for the sole purpose of transporting "freeborn blacks" and "emancipated slaves" back to Africa.

In 1822, the society established a colony on the west coast of Africa that would become the independent nation of Liberia in 1847. By 1867, the society had sent more than 13,000 "American blacks" to Liberia.

Kaspar Hauser, the youth who appeared mysteriously on the streets of Nuremberg, Germany, met an equally mysterious death in 1833.

In 1833, the society issued a one-cent token that depicted a "Freed Negro" standing next to a palm tree, with a ship in the distance.

The token was used as coinage in Liberia. Thus, U.S. Mint officials had unwittingly produced their first foreign coin—even though they wouldn't officially gain the power to do so until passage of the Mint

Act of Jan. 29, 1874.

For today's collectors, the 1833 Liberian cent can be regarded as a "Hard Times" token because it wasn't acknowledged as a foreign coin in the Mint's annual report. Since it actually did serve as coinage, the cent can also be viewed as Liberia's first coin.

PORTUGAL'S MARIA II was restored to the throne by her father, Dom Pedro, in 1833.

To make it official, Dom Pedro ordered that two gold coins be struck with the image of the 14-year-old girl on the obverse.

One coin shows the queen bare-headed and the other depicts her wearing a tiara. Both are in the denomination of one peca, worth 7,500 of Portugal's smallest denomination at the time, the reis.

An 1833 crown-size silver coin worth 400 reis also was issued, with the legend MARIA II REGINA, but without a portrait.

Maria had ascended to the throne at the age of 7, but had been deposed by her uncle and regent, Dom Miguel.

Dom Pedro had spent most of his time as the emperor of Brazil, preferring to rule over that massive nation. But he was forced to abdicate in 1831 in favor of his 5-year-old son, so he returned to Portugal to help restore his daughter's power.

Dom Pedro forged an alliance of Britain, France, Spain and Portugal, which succeeded in expelling Dom Miguel from Portugal in 1834. Dom Pedro died later that year, but Maria would reign until 1853.

IF YOU'VE BEEN complaining about your job, consider this:

A factory act approved by the British Parliament in 1833 ended employment for children under age 9, and limited children between 9 and 13 to working 48 hours a week.

Children between 13 and 18

Bottled, carbonated water was first sold to New York merchants in 1833 by John Matthews, who developed and patented an apparatus for carbonation.

Today's collectors can obtain the 1833 Classic Head half cent for about $50 in fine, $80 in extremely fine, and $300 in MS-60 Red-Brown.

The 1833 Capped Bust half dime had a mintage of more than 1.3 million and One variation of the 1833 half dime features extra spaces between the numerals in the date. Another variety has an extra-heavy rim on the obverse.

were limited to 12-hour days and 69-hour weeks.

Unfortunately, the law applied only to textile factories.

Meanwhile, children between 7 and 12 made up one-third of the factory workforce in the United States in 1833.

Massachusetts passed the first child labor law in the United States in 1836 and many other states followed suit.

It would take the federal government until 1938 to establish national standards for child labor.

SPAIN'S FERDINAND VII died in Madrid in 1833 after a repressive 19-year reign.

He was replaced by his 2-year-old daughter, who would reign as Isabella II. The true power behind the throne was Ferdinand's fourth wife, Maria Cristina.

Meanwhile, Ferdinand's brother Carlos tried to claim the throne with the support of political extremists. This resulted in a civil war between the Carlists and the Cristinos.

The Carlists were eventually defeated with help from Portugal, Britain and France.

Isabella II would begin appearing on Spain's coinage in 1835. The portrait had the appearance of a well-fed, full-grown woman, even though she was only 5 years old at the time.

A BRITISH GUNBOAT claimed the Falkland Islands in the South Atlantic as a crown territory on Jan. 1, 1833. Two days later, British forces seized the islands from Argentina.

Argentina disputed Britain's claim for the next 149 years.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA, HAD its beginnings in a cabin built by pioneer Hardy Ivy on former Creek Indian territory at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains. The town was first known by the name Terminus.

Avocado trees from Mexico were introduced into southern Florida by horticulturist Henry Perrine.

Bottled, carbonated water was first sold to New York merchants in 1833 by John Matthews, who had begun work on developing the first soda fountain.

A diaphragm contraceptive made of rubber was invented by German physician Friedrich Wilde.

Frederic Tudor had long been harvesting ice from lakes and ponds around Boston and shipping it to the Southern states, Cuba and Mexico. In 1833, he loaded his ship, the Tuscany, with 180 tons of U.S. ice and set sail for India. The trip took over four months and half the ice was lost in transit, but the voyage turned a nice profit.

In Japan, meanwhile, cold weather and flooding caused a three-year famine in the Tenpo region, killing tens of thousands of people.

A Swiss miller replaced his ancient millstones with rollers, which could grind down grain into flour quickly and efficiently.

The New York Sun was launched on Sept. 3, 1833, by 23-year-old publisher Benjamin Day. It would become the city's first successful penny daily at a time when the competition charged six cents per issue. The next day, the Sun hired the first U.S. newsboy, 10-year-old Barney Flaherty.

The publisher's son, also named Benjamin Day, would invent the Ben Day process for shading in printed illustrations.

NO U.S. DOLLAR COINS were made in 1833, even though the silver dollar was considered the basic monetary unit of the United States.

Silver dollar production had ended in 1803 and wouldn't resume until the Gobrecht dollar of 1836. The U.S. gold dollar wouldn't be introduced until 1849.

Most Americans dealt in barter, currency and credit in 1833. If you wanted to carry around serious coinage, you packed either half dollars or quarter eagles ($2.50 gold pieces).

The Mint produced just 4,100 quarter eagles in 1833, a mintage that would jump to more than half a million in 1836.

The 1833 is now considered the second-rarest of the Capped Head quarter eagles, made from 1821 through 1834. It is thought there are only 50 total survivors today.

The highest-graded 1833 quarter eagles are two MS-66 coins graded by PCGS and a Proof-66 that is one of an estimated four surviving proofs of this date.

Despite the low estimated survivorship, most price guides treat the coin as a common date for the Capped Head series.

The 1833 quarter eagle is typically listed at about $6,500 in fine, $10,000 in XF, $22,000 in MS-60, and $40,000 in MS-63.

In a practical sense, you'll probably have a difficult time locating an 1833 quarter eagle in any condition.

According to the Economic History Services website, $2.50 in 1833 would have been equivalent to about $73 in buying power and $691 in unskilled wages in 2016.

THOSE SEEKING A numismatic memento of the year 1833 are in luck. The prices of 1833 coins range from $50 for a good example of either the half dime or dime all the way to five-figure prices for rarities such as the 1833 business-strike half eagle.

You can even dream about owning that all-but-unique example of the 1833 proof half eagle.

If the tale of Kaspar Hauser has caught your imagination, there is no shortage of speculation about this mysterious historical figure. Hauser is the subject of an estimated 2,000 books and at least two feature movies, Werner Herzog's "The Enigma of Kaspar Hauser" and Peter Sehr's "Kaspar Hauser". Unless you speak fluent German, make sure you get copies with English subtitles.

English-speaking fans of Andrew Jackson might want to keep an eye out for the 1953 movie "The President's Lady", starring Charlton Heston as Jackson and Susan Hayward as Jackson's wife, Rachel.

The drama focuses on the terrible political smear campaigns over the fact that Rachel's divorce prior to marrying Jackson wasn't legal due to a small technicality.

Jackson's battle with the Second Bank of the United States doesn't come into play—but who wants to watch a movie about a bank? ☺

Spare Change: An Update

In the January 2017 issue, I wrote about how my now 11-year-old was looking for ways to get more bang for her buck. She wanted to make more money up front so that she had more to spend later.

At the time, she was supposed to split her “paycheck” three ways: spend, save and invest.

She soon realized that a few dollars a week split three ways just doesn’t give her much spending money, so she created a change jar. We all started filling the jar with spare change. She would then roll it and exchange it at the bank for more readily accepted funds. (Believe it or not, sweet shops and craft stores don’t always like to handle coins.)

That was a good start, but like many kids her age, she wanted more. How could she make the most of these coins? I came up with five ideas:

1. She could use it. And use it she has. Now, she takes some spare change with her on every shopping trip and errand run. If there’s even a remote possibility that we’ll run into a bookstore, bakery, or toy aisle, she’s prepared. She has purchased several books at the school book fair with her own money. (They don’t mind the loose change.) She also likes to treat Mom and Dad to the occasional cup of coffee.

2. She could deposit it directly into a bank account. This has been more difficult than we all thought. Rolling enough coins to open a savings account takes a lot of time. Finding a bank that has few fees takes a lot of time, too. A credit union—a financial cooperative that’s owned by its members—might be the best way to go.

3. She could pour it into a Coinstar machine. This came to an end a few months ago, when Coinstar removed its machines from our local grocery stores. Prior to that, she had enough change to earn two small store vouchers.

4. She could save it all for something big. Next to using it on shopping trips, she is saving her money for something big: a laptop or partial payment for the 8th grade trip to Washington, D.C., whichever comes first. She added it all up over the summer and winter breaks, each time proudly giving me the new numbers—how much her stash has increased and approximately how much more she has to go. I would even be willing to put this in the “invest” category. She’s investing in her education if she chooses a laptop, and the return on investing in travel is priceless.

5. She could look for collectible coins.

This was a great early fall activity, when we still had a couple of weeks of unbearable heat. She set aside some coins that looked interesting, then used my slightly outdated Red Book to do some research. She’s found nothing of great monetary value yet, but she’s barely made a dent in her accumulation.

That’s where things stand after 12 months. Did you try these, or other, ways to make the most of your spare change jar? ☺

Secrets to Being a Smart Buyer Revealed

[PELHAM, ALABAMA] Whitman Publishing recently released Inside the Rare Coin Marketplace: Secrets to Being a Smart Buyer, by Q. David Bowers. The 320-page, full-color book is available online and in bookstores and hobby shops nationwide for $14.95.

Inside the Rare Coin Marketplace shares Bowers' over 60 years of numismatic experience. Bowers states his goal in the preface: "I would like you to become an expert collector of your choice of specialties: coins, tokens, and/or medals."

"I do not pretend to predict cycles for modern art or autographs or restorable Victorian houses," Bowers writes, "but I have a lifetime of experience with rare coins, enabling me to predict (so far) various sea changes in that market."

The book's range is very broad, covering everything from discussions of the minting process and distribution of coins to a "personal scrapbook" of Bowers' own experiences dating back to the 1950s.

Whitman Publishing is the Official Supplier of the American Numismatic Association. ANA members receive 10 percent off when ordering the book directly from the publisher at Whitman.com. ANA members can also borrow it for free from the Association's Dwight N. Manley Numismatic Library.

COUNTERFEIT DETECTION

NGC Helps with Identification of Counterfeit Coins

[SARASOTA, FLORIDA] Numismatic Guaranty Corp. has launched an online counterfeit detection resource. Located at NGCcoin.com/counterfeits/, the resource focuses on the 50 U.S. coins and 25 Chinese coins most often coveted by counterfeiters. Each of these 75 coins has its own page that includes high-resolution images, the types of counterfeits typically seen, tips for detecting these counterfeits, and more.

The resource highlights such coins as the 1909-S VDB Lincoln cent, which is, according to submissions to NGC, the most commonly counterfeited U.S. coin. The most commonly seen counterfeit of a Chinese coin is the Year 23 (1934) Junk L&M-110 dollar, named for the ship on its reverse.

The Counterfeit Detection portal also has a section that explains the features of different types of fakes, which include cast, electrotype, spark erosion, and transfer die counterfeits, as well as the "categories" of altered dates and altered mintmarks.

Existing content will be updated as necessary with the discovery of new counterfeits. NGC's Counterfeit Detection resource will also continue to evolve, with new sections compiled as the data becomes available.

Plan Ahead for the Long Beach Expo

[LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA] One of the West Coast's largest collectibles marketplaces will take place next month. The Long Beach Coin, Currency, Stamp & Sports Collectible Show will be held Feb. 22-24. Show hours are Thursday 10 a.m.-7 p.m.; Friday 10 a.m.-7 p.m.; and Saturday 10 a.m.-5 p.m., with limited dealers on Saturday.

The No. 1 attraction at the Expo is the bourse floor, but there are also special exhibits. For example, gold coins and bars and other historical artifacts can be viewed as part of the SS Central America's "Ship of Gold" display. Collectors of all levels and ages can take part in other activities, too, such as:

- a Signature Auction held by Heritage Auction Galleries
- on-site coin grading by PCGS
- the Young Numismatists Treasure Hunt
- the Kids Corner, hosted by the Long Beach Stamp Club
- seminars by prominent hobby authorities, educational forums and club meetings

The Expo gives dealers an opportunity to do business with each other, and for collectors to establish business relationships and friendships. For more information, visit longbeachexpo.com, or call 888-743-9316.

NOTICE TO COIN BUYERS

In looking at advertisements in COINage Magazine, the reader should be aware that there is no precise or exacting science for grading coins. Opinions of two viewers of the identical coin can, and do, differ, even when they are those of experts, because perceptions as to the state of preservation are not always identical.

For grades that are circulated, there tend to be several well-defined and uniform criteria that are utilized, but the grades themselves may be different, because they represent an impression or indication as to the amount of wear on a coin.

Uncirculated coins have no visible signs of wear, though they may have blemishes, bag marks, rim nicks, tarnish, or may even be weakly struck (which often resembles wear). In uncirculated condition, there are many different grading opinions, some of which are described adjectively, others with numbers. Not all numbers have the identical meaning. This depends on the grading standard utilized.

The value of the item to the buyer should be determined by the price, not the grade. Your examination of and satisfaction with the coin should be the criterion, not the grade represented by the seller, or a determination made by another.

Your best protection is your own knowledge and the trust that has developed between you and the dealer over a series of mutually satisfactory transactions.

All advertisers in COINage Magazine agree to a seven-day unconditional money-back guarantee for all items with the exception of bullion and bullion-like coinage, whose dominant price element consists of the value of its precious metal.

If you are displeased with the purchase from an advertiser in COINage Magazine and do not receive proper satisfaction, please contact our advertising service department immediately.

Standards for grading by advertisers must specify which guideline or system is utilized. The notification may be within the context of the advertisement (if it varies from item to item), or by means of the following symbols:

A American Numismatic Assoc. Grading Guide; N NCI; NGC Numismatic Guaranty Corp. of America; P Photo-grade; PCGS Professional Coin Grading Service; PCI; ANACS; ACG

Some of these names are registered trademarks, or are used under license. All uses in COINage Magazine shall be strictly in accordance with such authorized use.

Any other grading standard or system utilized must be specified. A combination of any of the above standards may also be used if specified. If there is no symbol, or other explanation, the reader must assume that the advertiser's grading standards are based upon his own personal experience.

Uncirculated coins in mint state (MS) may be described with numbers or adjectives. Unless the advertisement indicates otherwise, the following standards are used:

MS-67: "Superb Brilliant Uncirculated" or "Superb Gem Uncirculated";

MS-65: "Gem Brilliant Uncirculated" or "Gem Uncirculated";

MS-63: "Choice Brilliant Uncirculated" or "Choice Uncirculated";

MS-60: "Brilliant Uncirculated" or "Uncirculated."

COINage Magazine reserves the right, to which the advertisers consent, to monitor all merchandise offered in its pages and to make occasional test orders under assumed names to verify that coins are as advertised. Advertisers must agree to adhere to the minimum standards set above and understand and consent that violations may lead to suspension of advertising privileges.

Inadvertent typographical errors occur. Advertisements appearing in COINage Magazine should be considered "requests to inquire" rather than unconditional offers of sale. All prices are subject to change at any time without notice.
