Pop, Modern and Contemporary Art at Hamilton-Selway, West Hollywood, CA

Over the past three decades Hamilton-Selway Fine Art, Inc. grew to become one of the largest purveyors of Pop, Modern, and Contemporary Art on the West Coast. The gallery has a simple philosophy—to provide pristine condition works from paradigm-shifting artists at the best possible price points. Hamilton-Selway works with a broad clientele ranging from first time buyers to seasoned aficionados, prominent corporate collections to well established international galleries, museums, and everyone inbetween.

Their formidable inventory sets Hamilton-Selway apart from other galleries and dealers. This is true both in terms of breadth and depth — they have a lot, and have the best — foundational works that defined entire movements from artists like Andy Warhol, Keith Haring, Roy Lichtenstein, Jean-Michel Basquiat, Ed Ruscha, Robert Longo and others. Through this, Hamilton-Selway offers significantly more advantages to prospective collectors than they are likely to find elsewhere. By amassing these works, the gallery eliminates the risk on behalf of their clients by maintaining complete control of the condition of the art and greatly reducing the role of third parties in the search for the perfect piece.

Gallery partner Rhonda Le and her team's understandings of the artists they offer are unmatched because they have a hand in the entire context. Within their inventory, for example, they can see the threads of fashion, sexuality, politics, media and the taboo fan out across the decades from Andy Warhol's genius to the shaky foundations of postmodernism and beyond. The mutual influence of Jasper Johns, Robert Rauschenberg, and Chuck Close, is obvious to them as they can see the works side by side from their own stores on a whim. Consider the now ubiquitous work of Keith Haring, originally conceived on the walls of the New York Subway, which paved the way for the hybrid street-art/high-art careers of artists across the globe like Mr. Brainwash, KAWS, and Bambi; or the bifurcated relationship of text within modern and contemporary art laid out by Jean-Michel Basquiat (political/subversive), Roy Lichtenstein (consumerism/parody) and Ed Ruscha (icons/aura).

The entire arch of postwar art history can be plotted through Hamilton-Selway's stock. It's this first-hand familiarity with the greats that provides them and their clientele with the confidence in the integrity, historical importance, and visceral power of every work they select. From their encyclopedic collection of Pop art straight through to contemporary giants of today, Hamilton-Selway offers museum grade artwork and top-tier, informed art consulting across aesthetic predilections, artists, and movements of every stripe

Hamilton-Selway Fine Art, Inc. is located at 8678 Melrose Avenue, West Hollywood, CA 90069. For the latest gallery news, including recent acquisitions, please visit hamiltonselway.com or call the gallery directly at 310-657-1711.

Prints and Books by LOUISE BOURGEOIS at The Museum of Modern Art

On view through January 28, 2018

The Museum of Modern Art's Louise Bourgeois: An Unfolding Portrait, is the first comprehensive survey of Bourgeois's prints and illustrated books. It places these mediums within the context of the artist's overall practice and sheds new light on her creative process. The exhibition includes 265 prints (including those in books and series), 23 sculptures, nine drawings, and two early paintings. Louise Bourgeois is organized by Deborah Wye, Chief Curator Emerita of the former Department of Prints and Illustrated Books—a longtime friend of the artist and a leading scholar of her work—with Sewon Kang, Curatorial Assistant, Department of Drawings and Prints.

Louise Bourgeois (1911-2010), a celebrated sculptor who worked in multiple mediums, was motivated by emotional struggle. Through art, she made her emotions tangible and sought to understand and cope with painful memories, jealousy, anger, anxiety, loneliness, and despair. Art was her tool of "survival," she said, and her "guarantee of sanity." This exhibition highlights the themes and motifs that served as visual metaphors for Bourgeois and recur in her artistic practice across seven decades. They vary from architectural forms to growth and germination in nature, from the human body and sexuality to motherhood, and even include symbolic abstraction. Her illustrated books bring attention to another of Bourgeois's little-known creative outlets: her highly evocative writings, which form the texts for these volumes.

"Her prints and their evolving states of development are especially revealing as they provide the opportunity to see Bourgeois's imagination unfold," says exhibition curator Deborah Wye. "To view such sequences is akin to looking over the artist's shoulder as she worked."

The creation of multiple examples of the same composition is fundamental to printmaking, and this encouraged Bourgeois to re-envision her imagery in myriad ways by embellishing her prints with gouache, watercolor, pencil, and ink to reflect her changing moods. She also benefited from printmaking's collaborative nature, which often entails the encouragement of publishers and the assistance of expert technicians. Bourgeois's printmaking relationships could lift her spirits, and the work she accomplished with her collaborators in her home/studio on 20th Street in Manhattan was creatively energizing.

The entire body of Bourgeois's printmaking comprises some 1,200 individual compositions, and constitutes a major component of her work overall. She created prints in two periods of her career. In the 1940s, she was an active printmaker and painter; she transitioned to sculpture only late in the decade. At that time, while raising three small children, she often made prints at home on a small press. She also frequented Atelier 17, a renowned print workshop that had relocated from Paris to New York in the war years. When Bourgeois turned definitively to sculpture, she left painting behind, but returned to printmaking many decades later, in the late 1980s. During the 1990s and 2000s—when Bourgeois was in her eighties and nineties—she made prints a part of her daily practice. She resurrected her old printing press from the 1940s, and eventually added a second, both located on the lower level of her home/studio.

The thematic sections of this exhibition bring together prints from both periods of Bourgeois's engagement with the medium. They also include related sculptures, drawings, and early paintings, to underscore her overarching concerns. She saw no "rivalry" between the mediums in which she worked. Instead, she said, they allowed her "to say same things, but in different ways."

With some 300 works, Louise Bourgeois: An Unfolding Portrait sheds new light on Bourgeois's creative process and places her prints and illustrated books in the context of related sculptures, drawings and paintings. The survey is on view at The Museum of Modern Art, 11 West 53rd Street, New York NY through January 28, 2018. For more information, please visit moma.org.

Williamson Gallery at Scripps College

"Revolution and Ritual: The Photographs of Sara Castrejón, Graciela Iturbide and Tatiana Parceró," in this exhibition, the Williamson focuses on the works of three Mexican women photographers who explore and transform notions of Mexican identity in images that range from the documentary to the poetic. By bringing their work into conversation, the exhibition invites readers to consider how photography has been transformed over the past century in Mexico and how it continues to respond to artists' interest in representing present and past, self and other. This exhibition is part of the "Getty Pacific Standard Time LA/LA Initiative." Thru Jan 8

SANTA BARBARA, CA

Santa Barbara Museum of Art

"Brought to Light: Revelatory Photographs in the Santa Barbara Museum of Art Collection," this exhibition allows visitors to experience fascinating aspects of SBMA's collection by presenting several distinct single-artist presentations of photographs that may challenge prevailing views of an artist's work, and offer intriguing insights into photographers entirely new to the museum collection. Jan 28-Apr 22 | "Crosscurrents: The Painted Portrait in America, Britain and France, 1750-1850," before the invention of photography, painted portraits were the most coveted means of commemorating important members of society. This exhibition explores the dynamic dialogue that took place over the course of around a century between American, British and French portraitists from the Colonial period through the Industrial Revolution. Jan 28-May 27 | "Story-Telling: Narrative Paintings in Asian Art," exhibition features eight narrative paintings from China, Japan, India and Tibet, showcasing the diversity of the format and expressive versatility of these Asian cultures, thru Feb 25 | "Highlights of the Permanent Collection," ongoing

Grounds For Sculpture

Joyce J. Scott: "Harriet Tubman and Other Truths," a gifted storyteller from her early days in theater, Scott painstakingly weaves narratives with brightly colored tiny glass seed beads, sleekly sensuous and luxurious Murano glass and fanciful found objects. In turn personal, political and cosmic, her subject matter is topical and often unsettling, powerfully presenting images dealing with racism, classism, slavery and misogyny. Guest co-curated by Lowery Stokes Sims and Patterson Sims, the show includes a survey of more than 50 works from the last 45 years, in addition to new works based upon the real and imagined life of Harriet Tubman that were especially commissioned and created for this exhibition. Thru Apr 1 | Also on view: Daniel Clayman: "Radiant Landscape"; and "That's Worth Celebrating: The Life and Work of the Johnson Family"

ROSEMONT, PA

Lawrence Gallery

John A. Benigno: "The Adobe Church Project - Built of Earth and Faith," thru Jan 12 | Jon Eckel and Ron Rumford: "Proximus," this dynamic two-person show features recent works on paper and canvas. Both artists take inspiration from pre-war to mid-20th century American and European art and the arts of indigenous cultures. While Eckel responds to sculpture, landscape and movement, Rumford is more inclined to music/cadence and the patterns in two-dimensional art. Rich, saturated color, perceptive drawing and strong composition establish the common ground in their art. This exciting, colorful work from each artist activates the gallery and involves the viewer immediately. Jan 18-Mar 8

CAO YU's I Have An Hourglass Waist at Galerie Urs Meile, Beijing

Galerie Urs Meile is hosting Chinese artist Cao Yu's first solo exhibition I have an Hourglass Waist through January 28, 2018. The exhibition presents some highly experimental and adventurous works by the artist in mediums such as video, painting, photography, sculpture, performance, and installation. Cao probes the relationship between art, reality, and meaning through striking visuals, and sets the exhibition as a magical field that is brimming with unease and tension.

A psychological sense of doubt and unease weighs on the viewers as they move around in the exhibition space. From the moment they enter the exhibition hall (when they might accidentally get their hands smeared in Vaseline while pushing open the doors) to the exhibition hall itself, where they'll watch a video that shows the artist making dough with her own urine, the sense of disquietude never relents. In The Colorful Clouds (2017) Cao shows a bra that is crushed underfoot. The video work Fountain (2017) shows the artist creating a seemingly masculine, phallic fountain monument using her own lactating body. In yet another video work I Have... (2017) Cao is seen uttering phrases beginning with "I have..." that become grating and are intended to provoke anger and jealousy.

The Unlikely Friendship of EDGAR DEGAS and PAUL VALÉRY at Musée d'Orsay, Paris

By Cody Delistraty

A frequent dinner guest of the wealthy engineer, art collector, and impressionist painter Henri Rouart, Edgar Degas was - for better or for worse - always the life of the party. "At dinner every Friday, at M. Rouart's, Degas would be the soul of the evening," wrote the poet Paul Valéry in his 1936 monograph called "Degas Danse Dessin," which chronicled his 20-year friendship with the artist. "A constant, brilliant, unbearable guest, spreading wit, terror, and gaiety. A piercing mimic, with an endless fund of whims, maxims, banter, anecdotes, brilliantly unfair in his attacks, infallible in his taste, narrow-mindedly yet lucidly passionate, he was always throwing mud at writers, at the Institut, at the aloof poseurs, and the artists who were bent on getting there... I can still hear him."

There is relatively little known of Degas's interior life. (His biographer Roy McMullen called him a "formidable enigma.") Historians are therefore particularly grateful for Valéry's eloquent 272-page monograph, first published by Editions Volland, which includes dozens of pages of illustrations. Through February 25, 2018, the Musée d'Orsay in Paris will be exhibiting "Degas Danse Dessin," which juxtaposes excerpts from Valéry's monograph with Degas' paintings, drawings, photographs, and sculptures. In total, there will be over 200 works on display.

The exhibition also marks the centenary of Degas's death in 1917. Marine Kisiel and Leila Jarbouai, the Orsay's curator of paintings and curator of drawings, respectively, have collaborated on the show, focusing on Degas's personality, his art and his creative process, as mediated and interpreted by Valéry.

Degas and Valéry had a special friendship. The artist was more than 37 years older than the poet, and while Valéry was generally cool-headed, Degas was a loose cannon, with Valéry describing him as a "deliberately harsh character," having a “directness that bordered on brutality.” Their mutual friend, the symbolist poet Stéphane Mallarmé, could hardly stand Degas at times, but Valéry respected him deeply, always coming back to his friend’s talent. “As far as origin is concerned, works seem to be born of a happy encounter of a subject and a talent,” Valéry wrote in his monograph, “an artist of this profound kind.”

The Orsay exhibition begins with Degas’s drawings, exploring how his use of lines, dashes, and forms led to his finished works. The exhibition then moves to his interest in ballet before ending on his love for horses and the equestrian. The juxtaposition of Valéry’s text and Degas’s images provides an insight into the artist’s keenness for the realms of movement—principally, dancing and horse racing, which Valéry said mirrored Degas’s keenness for creating a sense of movement in his artworks.

The exhibition’s curators argue that Degas’s understanding of movement—more than almost anything else—goes furthest in explaining his creative process and artistic drive. Valéry would likely have agreed with this assessment, but he would also have probably thought it foolhardy to try to dissect Degas’s personality at all—even with his text as a source. Kisiel and Jarbouai, no doubt, deserve credit for trying.

MONIKA SOSNOWSKA

Structural Exercises

at Hauser & Wirth, London

By Anya Harrison

A roughly hewn concrete boulder balances precariously on the tip of its rounded bottom. It is dwarfed by black steel beams of varying lengths and thicknesses that sprout from it, their tips leaning against gallery walls and providing necessary stability. The materials are so familiar as to be almost easily ignored. In other circumstances, we might recognize them as two primary components of construction –the concrete fabric of a building and the steel armature that supports it. Yet in “Untitled” (2017), a sculptural composition first presented by the Polish artist Monika Sosnowska at Hauser & Wirth’s Los Angeles outpost earlier this year, these are literally fused into a tight balancing act.

The gallery is now presenting seven site-specific sculptural works that together form an immersive installation at one of its London spaces. Entitled “Sculptural Exercises” (through February 10, 2018), it is Sosnowska’s first major project in London since 2005 and continues her investigation and manipulation of architectural and structural components into absurd and uncannily familiar configurations.

Sosnowska's practice is directly informed by the radical and violent transformations to the urban fabric of her hometown of Warsaw over the past decades. Razed during WWII, the city was rebuilt during Soviet rule. In place of the original pre-war buildings, a new modernist architecture sprung up, one with utopian aspirations to remold the city in line with a new socialist order. As Communist ideology gave way to neo-liberalism from the 1980s onwards, buildings were razed once more to make room for new developments, in yet another cycle of construction and destruction. For Sosnowska, the exposed fragments have become a poetic metaphor for precariousness and for the political and social systems that underpin architecture.

While earlier works, such as "Handrail" and "Stairs" (both 2016 and also exhibited at Hauser & Wirth Los Angeles this year), incorporate easily recognizable details (as their titles imply), in "Structural Exercises" Sosnowska strips all references away to focus on the materials themselves – concrete, reinforcing beams, steel rods. In "Rebar 20" (2017), a steel rod traces an elegant line emerging and disappearing back into the ceiling. "H and Concrete" (2017), meanwhile, features a concrete ballast that is lifted toward the ceiling by a tripod of bent steel legs. If architecture is traditionally about order and structure, Sosnowska strips its core components of functionality and renders them defunct.
